63 teachers will get layoff notices

By Tedd Schneider staff writer

Sixty-three Wayne-Westland teachers will receive layoff notices this spring as the school district deals with declining enrollment and tightened finances,

The cutbacks, approved 6-0 with one abstention by the school board Monday, are more than double the 30 teacher layoffs made last year.

The district will also lay off a supervisor at the William D. Ford Vocational/Technical Center effective Aug. 31.

Board Trustee Sylvia Kozorosky-

Wiacek abstained, citing inadequate time to study the proposals.

"I think this is one of the toughest parts of this job," said trustee Teri Reighard Johnson. "We're dealing with people's livelihoods here.

"But we have a contract we have to live by, and people have to understand that with declining enrollment, we don't have that many options," she said.

The district is projecting a loss of 537 students next fall, said Bill Taylor, associate superintendent for employee services. Enrollment declined by more than 500 students this year, to 16,408 in kindergarten-12th grade.

EVEN WITH the layoffs, the district is expecting a $4-$5 million shortfall in next year's budget. The difference will be made up with money from $4.1 million savings on hand.

"What it boils down to," said Superintendent Dennis O'Nelll, "is that if we don't get some help from Lansing (school finance reform), we're just hitting the tip of the iceberg.

"By this time next year, we'll be looking at (laying off) building principals and cutting hours at some buildings," he said.

The projected teacher layoffs include:

• 28 junior high school and high school teachers

- 15 elementary teachers
- 2 elementary physical education teachers
- 5 vocational education teachers
- 13 special education teachers.

MANY RECEIVING notices are longtime teachers, Taylor said. The most senior person on the list has been with the district since September 1972.

Taylor said as many as 12 teachers could be reassigned to other fullor part time jobs within the district. Last year, seven teachers were laid off but were later recalled and reassigned.

He said a lower-than-anticipated number of retirements was partially responsible for the large number of layoffs. School officials were planning for about a dozen retirements. To date, just six teachers have given retirement notice, Taylor said. Among the course offerings affected by the layoffs and expected shifting of assignments will be the high school dance program, which will be dropped next year. This year's dance program featured five full classes at John Glenn High School and an equal number at Wayne Memorial High School.

One dance teacher will be reassigned to elementary physical education and the other to junior high school math, Taylor said.

Students will be offered a noncredit leisure class in place of dance.

"THAT'S REALLY unfortunate," said trustee Kathleen Chorbagian. "I don't think putting these kids into a class they have no interest in is the: answer."

"We looked at every possible wayto make the shift," Taylor said. "But." I think the decision was that if we couldn't run a good dance program, we shouldn't run one at all."

Education: An equal shot for all?

Educational inequality is a persistent problem for Michigan's public school districts.

Wealthy districts are able to provide their students with hightech educational options that might even make a small college envious, while other districts have trouble providing each student with a textbook.

The problem isn't the suburban-urban gap, or the suburbanural gap, envisioned by many legislators. There are vast differences among suburban districts as well.

Even in financially stable western Wayne County communities, the education a student receives could well depend upon which side of the street he or she lives.

While the state aid formula was long ago drafted to provide at least rough equality among Michigan's public school districts, it's difficult to find a district, whether rich, poor, or in the middle, that believes the formula doesn't need re-formulatina.

In this series, Observer reporters examine the problem of educational inequality.

By Doug Funke staff writer

Public school financing reform has become the key legislative issue in Lansing this year.

Long-running resentment be-tween rich and poor public school districts, and among taxpayers, has spilled over into heated debate among legislators.

"The problem has finally reached the boiling point," said state Rep. James Kosteva, D-Canton, a member of both the House taxation and education committees. "This disparity among school district spending . . , and concerns about output (student performance) are both reaching a pinnacle at this time," he sald.

AT FIRST glance, differences are enormoùs.

Administrators in less wealthy school districts like Garden City and Redford Union talk about scrimping and saving as they search for federal grants and beat the bushes for community donations of equipment and supplies. Meanwhile, administrators in Is money enough? 9A. 🗌 How some schools get by, 9Å Editorial Opinion: What is needed, 14A.

wealthier districts like Southfield and Livonia talk about being able to provide advanced science and language classes, some with less than 10 students, as well as full; time instructional aides in each kindergarten class.

Education already is big business in Michigan.

Public schools statewide collected $5.7 billion for grades kindergarten through 12, adult education and special education programs during academic year 1986-87.

That figure, according to Wallace Beggs, a state education department financial consultant, breaks down to:----

• $3.7 billion in locally generated property taxes.

• $1.8 billion in state aid. • $234 million in federal dollars. There are major differences in how individual districts raised that money.

SOME SCHOOL districts, such as Livonia -and South Redford, receive almost all their operating revenue from local property taxes. Others, like Garden City, count on state aid as their major revenue source.

Redford Union and Wayne/Westland are also among districts that derive roughly half their revenue from the state.

Districts spent different amounts per pupil, too.

Plymouth-Canton is spending $3,523 per student, according to Wayne County Intermediate School District figures, while South Red-ford spends $4,850. Nonetheless, Plymouth-Canton has a higher school property tax rate than South Redford.

Some argue that the quality of education shouldn't depend on where students live. Others question whether equity is even a realistic goal.

Still others argue social factors, not per-student spending, play a greater role in whether students succeed or fail in the classroom.

Demand for property tax reform further complicates the entire school financing question.

THE INABILITY of the state legislature and the governor to reach a consensus on a reform school financing/property tax package to present to voters illustrates the scope of the problems. "It's a very complex issue," said Frederick Ignatovich, a professor of education at Michigan State University. "It gets so complex, sometimes you get hung up on emotional issues.

"The more things folded into one found some surpsising differences among area school districts. See the stories on pagdo the schools currently spend their money?

"We have to take the dollars we have now and use them better," Bemis said.

Should the size of the ple - in addition to the way it's cut - be changed?

Kosteva isn't convinced. "I've never been convinced an increase in dollars is necessary at this time," he said.

Should the federal role in public education be expanded, or should it even have a role? The U.S. Constitution is silent and for all his talk about being the "education president" George Bush isn't promising many new spending initiatives.

Several Marshall Junior High School parents and at least one teacher criticized school officials this week for poor communication in handling the asbestos removal at the school last weekend.

Some parents kept their children home from school Monday after reading about the planned asbestos removal in Thursday's Observer.

The parents said they didn't receive any notification from the school.

Parents talked about the situation Monday in a meeting with Superintendent Dennis O'Nelll and Walter Durant, Marshall principal. Several parents addressed the school board during the public comments portion of Monday's meeting.

"We weren't notified this was being done," Erma Moss told the school board. "Finding-out about itsecond-hand doesn't enable us to make an educated decision about sending our children to school."

Durant said Tuesday he didn't inform teachers in advance about the cleanup because he didn't find out about it himself until Friday. "You (the newspaper) informed them for me," he sald.

HE DID SEND an explanatory letter home with students Monday, after the cleanup was completed.

A Marshall teacher who called the Observer Friday said a memo sent to teachers in March indicated the cleanup would be done after school was out in June.

Durant said nobody'from the district office contacted him last week after the school board approved a bid from a southern Wayne County waste management company firm to remove a 350 square-foot patch of asbestos from a hallway ceiling.

But a school official said Tuesday "there was communication between the maintenance department and the (Marshall) administration" about the problem as early as last Monday or Tuesday.

"It's my understanding that an assistant principal was notified," said Tom Svitkovich, associate superintendent for communications and finance.

But Svitkovich said he didn't know if word was passed on to the principal's office.

O'NEILL SAID Monday the district would in the future work to make sure parents are given advance notice on safety and health issues.

"As far as asbestos removal, this is just the beginning for this district and for others across the country," he said.

The damaged celling area treated last weekend was at the east end of the main hallway near the school office, school officials said.

Recent tests showed the asbestos content for the area at 2 percent, a level considered dangerous by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Air samples taken by an independent agency showed acceptable levels after the removal, school officials said Monday.

O'NEILL SAID the rest of the hallway will be treated this summer. Wayne-Westland met the May 9 deadline for turning in a plan to state health department officials for removal of asbestos from district buildings, he said.

Environmental leaders have urged asbestos management and removal programs in schools because asbestos fibers can be inhaled and cause debilitating or fatal diseases.

Studies of asbestos workers have shown that exposure to the fire-retardant compound increases the risk of developing lung cancer, cancer of the lining of the lung and abdomen and chronic lung disease, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

Board might sue to keep incinerator from closing

By Leonard Poger editor

A locally-supported rubbish incinerator is still burning, but its board of directors may sue to keep the Michigan Department of Natural Resources from closing it.

The board, whose members represented Garden City, Westland, Inkster, Wayne, and Dearborn Heights, held a special meeting Monday to discuss its legal options.

Ulrich Bauser, executive director of the Central Wayne County Sanitation Authority, refused to comment state DNR other than to say there is "litigation" possible.

The dispute centers on whether the authority's ash, dumped in a Huron Township landfill, is hazardous to the area's underground water supply.

The DNR says it is. The incinerator authority disagrees, questioning the state's testing procedures and results.

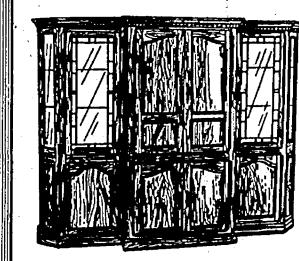

Following the special meeting Monday, the authority's board discussed scheduling a press confer-ence, to be attended by its attorney, to outline its position. As of Wednesday morning, no conference had yet Garden City Council member Jim Plakas, who represents that community on the authority board of directors, told the Observer. Monday afternoon that the authority feels it isn't violating any DNR rules and is a good position to legally fight a potential shutdown.

THE SPECIAL board session was held after the DNR threatened to close down the incinerator, which burns rubbish from its five member communities.

The furnaces were shut down at the end of 1982 after a long-standing dispute with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Wayne

This "Invasion" was planned by the Salvation Army, a non-profit organization that opened its newest community center in a former doctor's office at 2363 Venoy,

The center, directed by a corps of-ficer and a halftime social worker, will offer emergency food, clothing, shelter and prescription help, plus counseling, youth programs, Boys Club, music lessons, Bible studies and worship services.

Also, help will be provided for locating missing people, summer camps, disaster services, visitations to sick people, Thanksgiving baskets and Christmas relief in the neighborhood, which has a concentration of low-income people.

HEADING THE center, on the second floor of an aging retail build-ing, will be Lt. Gene Taffer, 26, who carries the title of corps officer. He has been in the Salvation Army for seven years, graduating from the group's officer training school in Chicago last June.

Working with him will be social worker Vicki Smith.

The Norwayne center was opened after more than six months of study of where the greatest needs were in northwest Wayne County, Taffer said.

The center can be phoned at 722-3660 during the day. Taffer's home phone number is on the center door after hours and weekends.

ON HAND for the dedication were two dozen Salvation Army cadets from the Dearborn Heights center and Chicago. The Illinois group presented the Norwayne center staff with maize and blue University of Michigan sweat shirts.

Mayor's Day marks 2 birthdays

ESTLAND celebrated Mayor's Exchange Day a week early and also marked two birthdays at the same time. The day is usually held during the annual Michigan Week observance during the third week in May.

But it was advanced one week and held Tuesday to help Westland mark its 23rd anniversary of city incorporation.

At a luncheon honoring Dearborn Mayor Michael Guido, it was also noted that Westland Mayor Charles Griffin marked his birthday (nume ber 49) two days before.

Guido, when asked during a postluncheon break if he learned any thing in his day-long trip to Weste land, said he liked the fire depart ment's fire safety house which opened last fall. It is open for tours by students and adults to educate them on fire prevention tips.

Guido, his wife, Kari, and other Dearborn city officials were greet ed Tuesday morning at Westland City Hall with the music of the John Glenn High School Rocket marching band and were welcomed by Westland city officials.

WESTLAND'S mayor commented that the sunny skies Tuesday morning marked the first Mayor's Exchange in three years without rain.

The day's schedule included a tour of city hall, police station, district court, fire department, economic growth center, senior citizens' center, municipal golf course and Community Relations/Cable TV studio, before a dinner was held in the evening at the SS. Helen and Constantine Greek Orthodox Church.

There was also a stop at the Willow Creek Apartments clubhouse where an open house was held to observe Older Americans' Week.

At the luncheon in the Ford Vocational/Technical Center, entertainment was provided by singer Bill Kahler.

After lunch, Wayne-Westland school superintendent Dennis' O'Neill commented that while he envies the Dearborn property tax base, he is proud of the excellent Cortis is also owner and general manager of the Grande Ballroom on Warren Road near Merriman where the dance marathon was held.

Lenea Renshaw, spokeswoman of the new parents' group, said Friday night that $6,000 had been pledged toward the group's goal of $10,000.

An estimated 55 students were at the marathon, wearing their specially designed T-shirts for the trip.

Cortis said he originated the idea for a dance marathon. The fund-raising started with flower sales last weekend and will continue through next Saturday. He said Domino's Pizza donated its favorite food while the Grande Ballroom provided hot dogs and soft drinks.

Hands-on education

Students learn how businesses operate

By Mary Rodrigue staff writer

Industrious Wayne-Westland teachers put their students to work in ventures ranging from a candy making business to video production in projects financed by a small grant from the Wayne County Intermediate School District.

"Hands-on learning is especially valuable for special education students. It removes the abstract from learning. It's fun and motivational," said Betty Kwierant, whose Hoover elementary special education and learning disabled students established a candy making business with the *$365 she received.

Kwierant received the money in time for a Valentine's Day sale. Be-" fore Easter, the group sold 1,000 pieces of candy - far more than Kwierant anticipated. Sometimes the students work one on one with para-professionals. Sometimes they work side by side, assembly line fashion. A Mother's Day sale rounded out this school year's agenda.

The original $365 grant allowed Kwierant to buy chocolate, various molds, aprons - even a small refrigerator. The sales to other students in the school have generated enough money to ensure continuation next year.

"WE'RE AT a break even point. We're not in this to make a profit," Kwierant said. "If we do make a profit, we'll make a donation to the school library."

Two different classes are involved: educably mentally impaired students in grades four to six, and learning disabled youngsters in grades one to three.

"It helps them learn fine motor coordination, money skills, time skills, and 'pre-vocational skills which will be a part of their future," Kwierant said. "I had no idea we would do so well."

This week the students were treated to a class trip to the Jiffy oake mix factory in Chelsea for a look athow the pros do it.

Barbara Dankert, a teacher at Patchin Elementary in Westland, received a $232 grant that allowed her fourth grade students to hook up via video with pen pals at Lincoln Elementary in Anaheim, Calif.

Activities included two video productions, a baking project, letters, a holiday ornament exchange and sending the West Coast class a Michigan products basket containing goods manufactured in the state.

OTHER GRANTS obtained by. teachers in Wayne-Westland included $440 for a film class at Wayne Memorial High, which brought in noted documentarian Peter Davis to discuss his six films, screen his recent work "Mandela" and view students' work on Apartheid.

Walker Elementary teacher Jan Brown spent her $500 grant on an outer space colony for American history students. Costumes were bought' to enhance lessons on various time periods. A $500 grant at Wayne Me-i morial allowed a mobile telecommunications system to replace a) slow system that required students to leave the classroom.

Two other grants enhanced reading programs at P.D. Graham and Fischer elementary schools. Hicks elementary teacher Robert Kover snared a $660 state mini grant for a self-sustaining business operated by special education students.

GARDEN CITY Schools grants coordinator Cheryl Willett was so impressed with response of her district teachers that an additional $1,799 was allocated from the Tobals curriculum development budget to finance the projects.

"We felt the ideas were so good," Willett said. "If teachers wanted something bad enough to write a grant, we wanted to give it to them. We find the best changes occur closest to where the kids are, so we funded our teachers to do their own curriculum development."

A well-rounded group of teachers from elementary to senior high, special education to adult education, were recipients of a dozen mini grants in Garden City, ranging from from $125 to $427.

KAY PAUPORE, an art instruc-tor at Garden City High, used $400 to bring in a visiting teacher from Japan to teach Japanese character making using Japanese brushes and ink. (The grant helped finance the program. The Japanese teacher already was in the district as part of a cultural exchange program.)

"Myoko Tsuji was with us one month. Our students did calligraphy, using the Japanese brush strokes. They learned how to write their names in Japanese and they learned #### numbers," Paupore said.

Even today, she notices students have incorporated some of the Japanese brush stroke techniques in their watercolors. The Japanese bamboo brushes — at $3 or $4 a piece would have been too expensive to buy without the grant money.

"And it was nice to have the correct ink. It worked out really well," Paupore said. "And it was really en-Tightening."

guise, she said.

Instead a staff member from the International Institute came to class armed with Japanese artifacts, kimonos and games. With the extra money. Japanese musicians performed another day for the children. And finally, the district's Japanese teacher in residence came in and cooked rice balls, green tea and rice crackers with the students.

"The kids had a ball and we got more than we bargained for," Navoy said. "It was really a positive experience for the kids.'

Other Garden City grants were $250 for a computer touch window at Lathers Elementary; $415 for a creativity project at Garden City High; $425 for a puppet theater troupe at Memorial Elementary: and

They put wonders to work

By Keith Postler staff writer

Imagine an electrically heated wiper blade that automatically melts ice and snow buildup on your windshield, or a volce-synthesized talking weather station that reports different aspects of the weather.

How about a digital fuel measurement device that can be adapted to any size gasoline tank in any vehicle? Or better yet, imagine a vehicle that will take you from Detroit to the southern-most tip of Florida --ол a single gallon of gas.

These are just a few of the many wonder machines or devices on display this month at Lawrence Technological University in Southfield. Each is part of an electrical or mechanical engineering project developed by teams of senior engineering students at Lawrence Tech.

TO KEEP PACE with Lawrence Tech's motto of "theory and practice." the senior engineering students have developed machines or devices and new technology to solve everyday challenges or inconveniences.

Two of the more interesting projects on display are a digital fuel measurement device and a Society of Automotive Engineers super mileage vehicle.

Designed and built by senior electrical engineering student Michael Lancia of Wyandotte, the digital fuel measurement device works like any other - except that it displays fuel consumption on a bar graph and digital readout.

Lancia's device uses an original fuel-level sending unit, common lh any car, and processes that signal through to a digital converter, providing an instant digital display of fuel consumption to the nearest gallon or liter.

pay for its own projects, said electrical engineering Professor Youssef Bazzi, who supervised the digital fuel measurement device.

Lancia's project cost "about $30" for the electrical parts, he said, not including the actual fuel gauge, which he borrowed from an old car. The rest of the parts he also found "Just laying around."

The digital fuel measurement device is unique in that it can be adapted to fit any size or shape fuel tank in any vehicle, said Lancia. The tech-N STATES AND A STATES AND A nology behind the device does have practical applications, but Lancia doesn't have any plans to market his project.

"I'm going to put it in my own car," he said, "but it's kind of expensive for real-life applications."

The 1989 SAE super mileage vehicle is an improvement over last year's model, which registered 578.44 miles per gallon at the Eaton Proving Ground in Marshall, Mich.

THIS YEAR'S project was designed and built by the senior mechanical engineering team of Vince Boscheratto, Allen Park; Rick Darbyshire, Lake Orion; Don Davenport, EACH STUDENT or team must Marine City; Mark Davis, Lincoln Park; Kurt Knop, Hartland; Tom La-Belle, Royal Oak; and Steve Warner, Allen Park. The team adviser was professor Charles Schwartz.

The 1989 model, including a twohorsepower Briggs & Stratton engine, has been modified to correct. design deficiencies in last year's model. Every vehicle system has been modified including the engine, body shell, frame and electrical system.

"It's basically the same model we used last year, but we've improved upon it," said Boscheratto. "We feel that we have the opportunity to get anywhere between 1,700 and 2,100 miles per gallon, based on simulated tests that we've run related to the Eaton test track."

In order to arrive at the mileage estimate, Boscheratto and his teammates fed information on their vehicle - drag coeffecient, horsepower and weight - and the Eaton test track into a computer, which ran the car through a simulated program.

"But there's really no way we'll know how many miles we'll get til we'll get there," Boscheratto said.

THE 1989 MILEAGE contest, held the weekend of June 4 at the Eaton Proving Ground, will feature a number of leams from engineering universities competing for the best miles per gallon rating.

Each engineering team will run its vehicle six laps on the 1.8-mile track. Once the race is over, the gasoline remaining in each vehicle will be weighed to calculate how many miles per gallon the vehicle achieved.

"It's hard for people to imagine we're getting this kind of mileage," he said. "but we're only letting the engine run for a few seconds or minutes per lap, then we shut it down and let it coast the rest of the way. It's not a race for speed, it's a contest to build the most efficient engine."

Are there any practical applications involved with the super mileage vehicle? Apart from trying to build a fuel-efficient engine, Boscheratto and his teammates hope the project will prepare them for the "real engineering world," he said.

And the mileage competition at the Eaton Proving Ground?

"I guess it's really for the glory of getting to stomp on other engineering schools," Boscheratto said.

State aid

By Tedd Schneider staff writer

Out-of-formula school districts are considered wealthier than their informula peers, but sending your children to public school in an out-of-formula district is no guarantee they'li get the best education money can buy.

There are exceptions to every rule - just ask the folks in South Redford and Plymouth-Canton.

The South Redford School District, for example, is an out-of-formula district with an image problem.

"It's ironic, really," Superintendent Jan Jacobs said. "People hear that we're out-of-formula and they lump us in with Bloomfield Hills.

"BUT WE'RE facing some severe money problems here," he said. "Sometimes it's a battle just getting people to believe that."

The 3,018-student district sliced $500,000 from its budget and cut two positions from its 130-member teaching staff this year, Jacobs said. Because enrollment in the district is increasing, there will be a higher student-teacher ratio and less money spent to educate each student.

South Redford receives no state aid for basic classroom programs and even though it spends more per student than most in-formula districts, the difference is shrinking every year. The $4,664 spent per pupil in South Redford this year is an 11-percent increase over what the district spent five years ago. That figure includes an additional 0.85 mill approved by voters in two separate elections last year.

tendent for business and operations. "We're going to have more money available for more projects based on our millage rate," he said.

But Hoedel said the transition has created a financing problem this year that could have long-term effects for current students. While district assessments increased by $4 million last year, the district lost more than $5 million in state aid.

Beginning next year, Plymouth-Canton will have to work harder to maintain its image as a "quality district," Hoedel said, referring to the downside of being out-of-formula.

"If the community drops its support and refuses to pass a millage you don't have that crutch of state aid to fall back on," he said.

DISTRICTS CAN fall out-of-formula for a number of reasons. If property tax assessments rise sharply, if enrollments drop, if a district's millage rate increases, or if any combination of these factors occurs, then the district could lose state aid for basic classroom programs.

Out-of-formula districts do receive relatively small amounts of state money (typically 1-5 percent of their operating budget) for other programs.

Of Michigan's 562 public school districts, 520 are in-formula. The majority of out-of-formula districts are concentrated in suburban Oakland and Wayne counties. Only five of the 14 districts the Observer looked at for this series are in-formula. They are Wayne-Westland, Garden City, Inkster, Redford Union and Clarenceville. "BEING AN in-formula district is a constant struggle," said Mike Shibler, Clarenceville Public Schools superintendent. "You're locked into what the state guarantees and that's just not sufficient to run a big program with all the frills like extensive foreign languages or big-budget extra-curricular activities." But Shibler said efficiently run informula districts offer good college preparatory education and may even outshine out-of-formula districts when it comes to educating students who aren't college-bound. One of the most comprehensive vocational education programs in the state, he said, is offered through in-formula Wayne-Westland's William D. Ford Vocational/Technical Center. This semester the center has approximately 1,750 high-school students enrolled in 23 programs, according to principal Edwin Ferguson. The center offers career training in fields ranging from culinary arts and graphic design to welding and auto mechanics.

BILL BRESLER/staff photographer

Nearby Inkster, however, is spending $3,618 per student - a 40-percent increase over the same period. Wayne-Westland, also in-formula, is spending $4,231, a 32-percent rise from 1983-84.

JUNE 12, South Redford voters will be asked to approve a Headlee override to increase their taxes further.

"I think the voters will realize that in order to provide a better education they're going to have to continue to be supportive." Jacobs said....

FOR Plymouth-Canton Community Schools, the problem isn't being out-of-formula, but getting there. The 15,000-student district is in the transition process and is scheduled to lose its state aid next fall.

District officials consider the move a mixed blessing.

On one hand, Plymouth-Canton will have "a better future" as an outof-formula district, according to Raymond Hoedel, associate superin-

Meanwhile, no politician wants to appear too bullish about a tax increase, particularly with elections for governor and the entire Legislature, including the Senate, coming up in 1990.

Birmingham's industrial technology classrooms are a long way from your standard shop class. There aren't lathes, saws and drill presses. Instead, there are robots — picking with them, turning them over and drilling effective more holes.

Nearby, students create their blueprints not on old-fashioned drafting tables, but on computer-assisted machinery.

introduces elementary students to economics. "Kids rent office space, open businesses, learn about interest rates, income, and inflation. Students also create a product, market it and sell it," said Jodi Armstrong, the schools' communications coordinator.

LIVONIA HOLDS a "school within a school" for the creative and performing arts. "It's alternative learning program is open to students who prefer a smaller, less structured educational setting centered around independent study and community projects," said Jay Young, supervisor of community relations. Every Livonia kindergarten teacher is assisted by a full-time instructional aide. Learning specialists assist middle school students and freshmen adapt to the high school setting.

"We're rewriting our physical educational curriculum to be more reflective of lifelong physical pursuits and wellness rather than learning and playing contact sports," Young added.

Students in Ann Arbor's home building program construct a house with help from skilled tradesmen, then market and sell it. The district's commercial foods program runs its own restaurant in one of the high schools.

Dearborn also offers a student-run restaurant, as well as a television studio; a dental assistance program; and strong programs in special education and for the talented and gifted.

School administrators in these affluent districts agree it's unfair that they enjoy such educational luxuries while other district, such as Plymouth-Canton can't even provide each student with textbooks.

But they disagree with those who say money should be taken from their wealthy districts and given to poorer ones.

"THERE ISN'T an educator in Ann Arbor that doesn't think it's terrible," said Ann Arbor Superintendent Richard Benjamin. "But I've never seen legislation to equalize educational spending in Michigan that didn't have a provision for making it unequal again."

Most equity plans, Benjamin said, contain provisions that would still allow some districts to tax their residents more highly than other districts. "We go beyond minimum requirements in a lot of areas, not as an expression of arrogance or privilege, but because our community feels it isn't just a question of just doing it for the kids," Benjamin said "We owe it to ourselves as adults to improve quality of life by improving our educational system."

Dearborn Superintendent Thomas McLennan is also skeptical of equity plans.

"I oppose that kind of leveling," he said. "Taking from out-of-formula districts in an effort to try in some way to patch the financial needs in other districts simply won't work. There isn't enough money there. Some additional revenue is what is needed."

Birmingham Superintendent Dr. Roger Garvelink said his district, like the other out-of-formula districts, receives no state aid for dayto-day classroom expenses.

Birmingham residents also pay state above average state sales tax because their income allows them to make above-average number of purchases, Garvelink said. Birmingham residents are also less likely to benefit from existing property tax relief plans like the circuit breaker, he added.

"We're not complaining about that, but we're also saying, leave us alone," said Garvelink.

The superintendents say they have financial struggles, despite high perpupil expenditures.

Dearborn needs "$50 or $60 million just to improve facilities in our school districts," said McLennan.

Nor is Birmingham immune. "We just lost a bond issue in March," said Garvelink. "We're cutting staff and programming in order to pay for the fixing of boilers and roofs."

"Because we spend a lot of money on our students, people conclude it comes very easily. They conclude that our taxes are not high, and they are very high," he said.

- Its narrow, dimly lit hallways make it a good candidate for one of those TV shows nostalgic for the 1960s.
- But officials in Redford Union, Garden City, Clarenceville and other financially pressed school districts say - they are moving with the times, though it takes student, staff and community support.
- Shoestring budgets, they said, need not translate to shoestring education.
  - "We have a very supportive community here," said Robert Schramke, in his 16th year as principal at Redford Union High School. "They've never defeated a millage (request). They don't have to say much more than that."

New this school year is a program to identify and help students at risk.

"IT'S NOT a big secret that there are a lot of dysfunctional families out there — a number of kids who really need our help," Schramke said. "We got a group of teachers together under Bob Green to adopt a number of students. That was somewhat successful." Things like a learning skills workshop staffed with volunteer teachers and peer tutors don't require a lot of money. Schramke is very aware of the budget constraints of an in-formula district.

"Our teachers do a lot of volunteering," he said. "We get an awful lot of teachers who are very concerned about kids — they don't leave when the bell rings."

Neither apparantly do students once they graduate. RU has an unusually active alumni association, with more than 8,000 members.

"We have some very successful people, all over the world," Schramke said. "We are looking for a big million dollar donor. There are so many things we could use the money for if we get an endowment fund."

Currently, the association is raising $40,000 to modernize the school auditorium, primarily by providing a new lighting system. About $8,000 has been raised so far.

"VOLUNTEERS FROM the community who are electricians will put the electrical work in place," Schramke added.

According to director of instruction Kenneth Johnson, Redford Union always places in the top third of school districts in Wayne County of graduates who continue their education, of that 25 percent go to four year universities. Redford Union is proud of its early childhood education programs.

Ironically one such program of at risk preschoolers and their families, disappeared when funds dried up. But not before the RU model was honored with a national Pacesetter award and several other districts copied its model.

Another low budget brainstorm concocted this year is student assemblies to recognize all types of positive behavior — good attendance, good grades, athletic accomplishments and the like. Pins and citations will be awarded.

Schramke would like to see a computer lab to assist students in academic courses. "Other districts just have it. We'll get it some day — it will take time."

GARDEN CITY officials also praised their community.

"I've said (to administrators) go out and see what peoplo will give us," Superintendent of Schools Michael Wilmot said. "We've gotten everything from new cars to three ring binders to motorcycles. We deal collectively with every major issue."

All junior and senior high students are on a six hour day, there is a comprehensive computer program, a novel teleconferencing hookup with students in Japan, a full range of extracurricular programs including music, art and physical education in elementary schools, and a comprehensive computerized curriculum review process. Almost half of all Garden City graduates go on to more schooling.

Superintendent Michael Shibler is so confident students get a good basic education in Clarenceville, he began guaranteeing diplomas a year ago June. Like a brand new appliance, Clarenceville graduates can enter the job force with a warranty — this student guaranteed to be proficient in reading, writing and math or employer is entitled to send graduate back to night school at district expense.

But Shibler hasn't had any takers yet. That's probably because another district policy is a ban on social promotions. Students must be 70 percent proficient in the basics to move to the next grade level.

"Every student eligible for graduation last year did receive a diploma," Shibler said.

Although superintendents would like to see education comparable on a geographical basis, they don't foresee solutions from Lansing.

"It's too political," Wilmot said.

Operating millage is the tax rate levied for day-to-day classroom expenses. Taxes levied to pay off bonds are excluded.

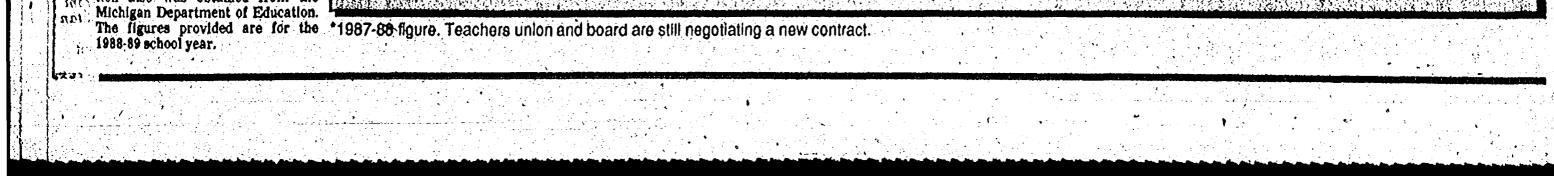

Spending per pupil is the amount of money spent to provide staff, programs and services to each child in the district.

State-equalized valuation or SEV per pupil is the amount of property tax value behind each student. The figure is drawn from home, business and industrial property tax assessments.

State aid per pupil is the amount of state money behind each district student. Figures vary wildly because in-formula districts receive state aid for basic classroom expenses. The smaller figures are posted by out-offormula district, which receive state aid only for busing and other stateordered programs.

How schools are getting by with less

By Mary Rodrique staff writer

For superintendents of the area's smaller, less wealthy school districts, educational inequity isn't an abstraction. It's something they live with every day.

For Garden City Superintendent Michael Wilmot, inequity means his squeaky, shakey chair isn't replaced because his district has to put repair money to use elsewhere.

Inequity stares Redford Union Superintendent Kenneth Erickson in the face with each glance at the Redford Township map.

For Garden City Superintendent Michael Wilmot, inequity means his squeaky, shaky chair isn't replaced because his district has to put repair money to use elsewhere. Taxable income behind each student in RU, a district of working class neighborhoods without much business or industry, is $41,988. In neighboring South Redford, industrially-rich and out-of-formula, taxable income behind each student is

"(South Redford) is part of the same township," Erickson said. "We're in the north and they're in the south. The difference is the railroad runs through their district, and they enjoy the industrial benefits that this brings. That's why their citizens pay lower taxes and gain greater financial benefit."

CLARENCEVILLE Schools Superintendent Michael Shibler can sympathize. The tiny Clarenceville district slices through Redford Township, Livonia and Farmington Hills and is also bordered by larger, wealthier districts like Livonia and Farmington.

"Our primary position is to change lawmakers attitudes to the disparity of in-formula districts," he said. "We must become politically active, to provide lobbying activities to change the manner in which schools are financed."

Terms at a glance

Here's a list of often-used terms related to public schools:

• Assessed value — What your property is worth. Assessments are based on prices paid for comparable local houses sold in the past year. The assessed value is one-half the presumed market value.

• State equalized value (SEV) — What all the property in a school district is worth — at least for tax purposes. SEV, multiplied by the tax rate, determines how much property tax the district collects. For instance, a house worth $100,000 would have an assessed value of $50,000. With a tax rate of 30 mills, the owner would have to pay $1,500 in taxes.

• Mills, Millage -- Used to figure tax payments, a mill equals $1 in taxes for every $1,000 of assessed value. Millage is another name, for tax rate.

• State aid formula — Michigan public school districts are guaranteed a fixed amount of dollars for each student per mill of tax. Some districts don't need state aid to reach the minimum. These out-of-formula districts receive no state aid for operations. Other (informula) districts depend on state aid to balance their budgets. All districts receive state aid for special education and selected other programs.

• Allocated millage -- By the Michlgan constitution, a minimum 15 mills can be collected from property owners without voter approval. A county tax allocation board doles out portions of that money to local taxing authorities, including schools and community colleges.

• Authorized millage — Any new taxes, approved by voters, above the 15 allocated mills.

• Truth in Taxation -- When property values go up, school districts can get more money from taxpayers without raising taxes. By law, school districts can keep that extra money only if they hold a public hearing, called a Truth in Taxation hearing, to discuss the situation. If they do not vote to keep that increase, their tax rate is cut, keeping overall tax payments the same. • Headlee tax limitation - If property values increase faster-> than the cost of living, the district's maximum authorized tax rate is reduced. If the school district was collecting the authorized maximum, taxes will go up no faster than the inflation rate. Not all school districts levy all of their authorized tax rate, so they may be able to raise taxes faster than the rate of inflation. The Headlee Tax Limitation amendment is named for its sponsor, Farmington Hills insurance executive Richard Headlee. - Headlee override - When property values rise fast enough to come under the Headlee limitation, voters can be asked to waive that limitation, thereby paying even higher taxes than if the Headlee limitation stood, • Categorical aid - State law demands that certain services be performed by school districts, including busing and special education programs. The state provides aid to school districts in each category, based on enrollment. This "categorical" aid is received by all districts, • 50-mill limitation -Michigan property owners can't be asked to pay more than 50 mills for general day-to-day operations of a local school district. Taxes used to pay off district bonds, however, aren't subject to the 50mill limit, pushing the overall school tax rate for some property owners higher than 50 mills. • Operating millage -- The money a school district uses for day-to-day operations, including payroll, materials, maintenance and utilities. It is subject to the 50mill state limitation. • Earmarked millage - The money paying for school construction or projects such as asbestos removal or changes to make school buildings more energy efficient - school districts can ask voters to approve a special millage, sometimes called a debt levy. This earmarked millage is used to pay off bonds. • Fund equity --- List all a school district's assets, subtract liabilities and what's left is fund equity, or fund balance. Typically, little of a school district's fund equity is in cash. The state has ruled that bus inventories - which some districts were including in lists of aspets --- can no longer be considered assets. This list was complied by county and state government officials.

Reform: Dollars and sense

By Brian Lysaghtand Diano Gale

Education is more than a dollars and cents issue, area school officials said.

"Lack of mone should not be used as an excuse for poor student performance in fasic areas," said Superintendent Michael Wilmot, whose Garden Gy Schools are currently saddled with a $600,000 debt.

Wilmot and oher educators believe a variety of factors, including parental involvement, peer pressure, family expectations, and parental education levels are more important than dollars spent per student in poosting classroom performance and encouraging students to staj in school.

MONEY AIDNE isn't enough, they said.

An examination of the number of students who continue their education beyond high school produced evidence to back that argument.

For instance:

• Plymoun-Canton spent $3,377 per student last year, the lowest level among districts surveyed for this article. Birmingham spent the moit, $6,170 per student. Yet, the two district's dropout and college jound results were similar. While 85 percent of Birmingham students continued their education beyond high school, 81 percent d Plymouth-Canton students did likewise. At Redford Union, 45 percent of students continued their education, the lowest level among districts surveyed, though that district spent nearly $300 more per student than Plymouth-Canton.

• Despit that, Redford Union's 7 percent dropout rate wasn't substantially higher than that of Plymouth-Canton where five percent of students failed to complete their education. Nearly 99 percent of all firmingham students complete their education.

Educatos aren't saying money isn't important, however, and are constally campaigning for more money.

"IF YOJ have more money you have more resources to give kids so the can do better," Wilmot said.

More csh buys better supplies, modern equipment and varied class offerings, educators say, but it doesn't ensure high test scores or studen(motivation).

"If I want to raise test scores I can do something with the curriculum," and Anthony Aquino, Livonia research evaluation specialist. "If you need to purchase different textbooks it might cost a lot of money if you need to realign curriculum it might mean workshops for leachers and that's cheap."

Educators said it was hard to prove high per student spending guarantees a good education because factors used to determine student specess could often be misleading.

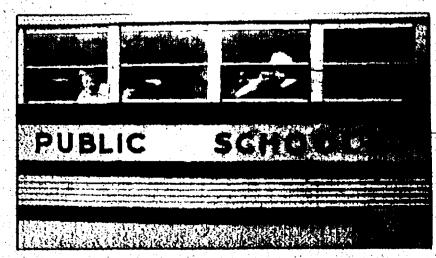

Drop dt rates are misleading, they said, because often times students feturn to school a short time later, they said. Individual situation, like pregnancies, affect drop-out rates the same way they affect the number of students choosing to continue their education, and Terry Davidson, Livonia research specialist. "We have pluses and we have minuses, and I would say finances are our biggest minus," Johnson said.

"You don't live and die by each year's data, each class has its own personality."

Districts surveyed for this article include Garden City, Wayne-Westland, South Redford, Redford Union, Plymouth-Canton, Birmingham, Farmington and Livonia.

It wasn't supposed to be like this, school officials and lawmakers said.

In-formula districts, like Garden City, Redford Union and Clarenceville, receive a major portion of their operating budget from state ald. State aid was supposed to bring them into rough equity with wealthier districts.

But school officials said the current formula still leaves their districts far behind.

Then, too, the unpredictability of state aid shares can make budgeting a nightmare.

Minor fluctuations in the number of students can cost in-formula districts thousands of dollars.

"Those years when our enrollment doesn't reach expected levels, we must cut back programs to accommodate our loss," RU's Erickson said. "The frustrating thing is the budget must be prepared by the end of June, without knowing the state aid formula or enrollment."

Unexpected loss of 100 students a few years ago cost Redford Union $350,000.

Voters in Clarenceville and Redford Union have recently raised taxes — even though the move costs average homeowners an additional $100-$150 a year.

Garden City, meanwhile, has been in deficit since 1983-84. Each year, the district must present a deficit reduction plan to the state for approval.

"IF WE ARE moving in a positive direction, they have allowed us to extend our plan," said Richard Witkowski, director of business services.

Thus far, the district hasn't had to eliminate classroom programs. Officials admit the cost has been high.

Equipment replacement and building maintenance are slack, as evidenced by Wilmot's broken chair.

"We're in a liability insurance pool to decrease premiums. We look at energy management plans. I've become an expert at purchasing gas from the well head," Witkowski said. "We've looked at restructuring other health benefits," he said.

Even though have haven't campaigned for a millage increase for day-to-day classroom expenses, the district recently asked voters for a $12.5 million bond issue to spruce up Garden City High after nearly two decades without change. It allows for updated science and academic laboratories, as well as library expansion. It also means new chairs, desks and hallway floors in the elementary schools.

A 3.5 MILL increase Redford Union voters approved last September will help that district get out of debt, restore programs like elementary physical education, music and art, and arrive at an interim settlement with staff.

In-formula district personnel learn to be crafty by snaring grants.

"We've gotten very skilled at that," said Kenneth Johnson, RU director of instruction.

RU's program was reduced significantly in the late 1970s, a time when student enrollment was in decline seemingly everywhere and school closings not uncommon. The gains being made today are simply a restoration of programs once drastically cut.

Garden City chose not to make those cuts, and as a result, is $1 million in debt, according to Superintendent Wilmot.

"That's down front $3.6 million four years ago," Wilmot said. "We refuse to deny kids opportunities. But it costs us. We have to borrow more for cash flow purposes. And the interest payments, compare that to revenue for textbooks and staff and you begin to see rapidly how we suffer."

Whatever courses of action their districts have taken, administrators said all decisions are made with students in mind.

"I'm awfully proud of our district," said Wilmot, who oversees Garden City's $29 million budget — $13 million of that in state aid, and 6,200 students.

"We've got some rough rows to hoe, that's for sure.

Richaid Johnson, Redford Union director of instruction, said, statisticiaside, the district's best qualities are motivated families and stidints who want to do well in the classroom. language pathologist at Field Elementary in the Plymouth Canton district, won a $200 award for a puppet project to help speech impaired students.

Carter used her award to create a portable puppet theater constructed of plumbing pipe - sturdy and expandable from 3-to-6 feet to accommodate the 5-11-year-olds she works with. She also bought an assortment of puppets.

She finds kids with speech problems "use language comfortably when they're behind a curtain. Stutterers can transfer their oral skills to fluency. And the little ones who hardly speak at all - put a puppet on their hand and you can't shut them up."

Older students write plays and perform them for small audiences. Younger kids work on vocabulary building and sentence structure. Carter works with 54 students in kindergarten through grade 5, from two to four times weekly depending on need.

"It's been great. The kids absolutely love it. I guess there is a little bit of a ham in all of us."

This was Carter's first grant. "As a teacher it's really exciting to get that extra bit of motivation," she said.

Other Plymouth Canton grants include $400 for children's literature as an alternative to the reading program; $99 for a library skills program using computers; $500 for a community booklet; $270 for computer literacy; $207 for learning styles alternatives; and $375 for a special education preschool program that matches tots with senior cltizens.

IN REDFORD UNION, junior high social studies teacher Karen Caprara made history come alive for her eighth grade classes with a $200 grant from the county.

"Through Ft. Wayne's History on Tour, we hired (actors portraying) a Union Civil War foot soldier and an abolitionist," she said. "The kids loved it. They talked about battles, the food they ate, an abolitionist newspaper. The abolitionist, an escaped slave, talked from the slaves' perspective," Caprara said.

"It's nice to be able to bring field trips into the classroom. It's easier than taking the students out."

the increase was due to new construction, the rest to rising values, Treasurer Robert Bowman said.

There was an 8.65 percent increase in real estate (land and buildings) to $112.7 billion and a 4.86 percent increase in personal property (machinery, equipment and inventory) to $16.1 billion.

"The increase in SEVs represents a strong and vibrant economy in Michigan," Bowman said. "Nearly one-third of the increase can be attributed to new construction, something I believe we haven't seen since the building boom of the early '70s." A breakdown by class of property:

• Commercial valuations increased by 10.3 percent, down from 11.3 percent in 1987.

• Residential valuations increased 9.6 percent due to increased new construction, up from 8.2 percent the previous year.

• Agricultural valuations decreased by 0.4 percent overall, compared to a 4.5 decline in 1987.

Equalization is a process to ensure that similar properties in different areas are not over or under assessed in relation to each other.

'Older cities' development plan faces debate

By Tim Richard staff writer

のないではないないで、

The Big Four will face a major test of leadership Friday in the Southeast Michigan Council of Governments.

SEMCOG's Executive Committee will decide whether to endorse the Big Four's goals for economic develonment - goals that denounce "urban sprawl," favor older cities and preserve nature in the countryside.

The question is whether dissidents from outlying areas will battle the goals because they fear an end toproperty tax abatements and a thrust toward public transit.

"We think it's good public policy. to not encourage companies to go (Dewey) Henry, director of Wayne County's Department of Jobs and Economic Development.

THE BIG FOUR are County Executives Ed McNamara of Wayne and Dan Murphy of Oakland, Detroit Mayor Coleman Young and Macomb Board Chair Mark Steenburgh.

Collectively, they have no legal authority and no staff, though they bill themselves as the "Greater Detroit Economic Development Group." They are trying to exercise political leadership to influence state Commerce Department policieš.

"Our principals feel, because of the severely competitive nature of economic development, we have to into green fields," said Dewitt find areas where we can agree," j.

Henry said last week during one of SEMCOG's county meetings to put out the brushfire of revolt.

Although the region has seen six years of economic growth and declining unemployment, Henry said, that growth has come "in pockets."

Left behind are Detroit, Pontiac and the downriver area along Jefferson Avenue - areas with water lines, sewers, roads, bridges and power lines, big investments known as "infrastructure." The Big Four want them included in future devel-. opment.

"THE LEADERS in government are talking about directing dollars ... federal and state dwindling resources . . . to make these policies work. That's where we're coming from," Henry said.

The official planning agency for the seven-county region, however, is not the Big Four but SEMCOG. That has been true since a 1964 federal highway act required coordinated planning in metropolitan areas. That's why SEMCOG is being asked to endorse the goals at 2 p.m. Friday in Port Huron.

What sticks in the craw of outlying areas of Oakland, Washtenaw and Monroe counties is not so much the goals but the processes to reach the goals.

Some Oakland County commissioners fear Murphy is making policy without consulting them. Murphy says he has given them information which they've not bothered to look at.

"A number from southern Oakland were laudatory," said John Am-berger, SEMCOG's executive director. That area includes the hodgepodge of cities around Royal Oak that are aging and looking for redevelopment once the crosstown I-696 freeway is completed later this year.

"Who's worried? The township officials who want growth but who haven't been beat up on by their citizens," he said.

CROWDS AT several meetings were small - the one in suburban Wayne County drew only three outsiders to the Romulus City Hall but a larger contingent showed up at Oakland Community College.

"Pontiac was overjoyed," said Oakland County Commissioner Marilynn Gosling, R-Bloomfield Hills, "but the outlying townships fear they will be excluded from sewer projects."

"Milford is concerned by sewer problems an zoning could be affected by this."

Some county commissioners felt they hadn't had a sufficient look at it, but Gosling said that problem is likely to dissipate by Friday.

Outlying areas don't share the concern about. "urban sprawl" and building plants in meadows. Their fear, she said, is that "if industries can't come to greenhelts, they'll go to Livingston or Genesee countles."

Gosling, a member of the SEM-COG executive committee, said th resolution approving the Big Four plan has been amended to assure communities they will be consulted about implementation strategies.

"Local officials don't like to be told how to run their cities and townships," she said.

On target

Parents, teens get message

HE WAYNE-Westland Board of Education was right on target Monday night in expelling two Adams Junior High School students for taking a gun to school.

The school board's action came just nine months after the district's first gun possession expulsion.

While we disagreed with the harsh punishment of two junior high boys expelled last summer, Monday's board action was justified because of the circumstances and facts of this specific case.

The message from the school board to students and parents is clear - guns won't be tolerated in school. If they are discovered, action will be taken on a scale of possibilities including expulsion. But disciplinary matters should also include an effort by school counselors and building administrators to tell teenagers of the dangers of their planned actions, whether it involves guns or drugs.

In too many cases, youngsters plan to do things which they think are fun, or at least not dangerous

But many teens don't have the life experiences or maturity to judge that their planned actions may create problems for themselves and others.

It's easy to blame the TV and movie violence. But parents must take a more active role in knowing what their teens are doing outside the home.

Parents must also share part of the blame for having handguns available in their homes. The guns should be locked up so youngsters can't get to them. Bullets should be kept in a separate location.

WHILE WE agree that the two teens should be expelled, the board and administration must be careful in separating those students actively involved in the gun possession and others who may have not have known of the presence of a gun in _ as a challenge to be met. a school bag they were carrying for someone

Hopefully, teens sent to an alternative program won't view it as a punishment and be resentful. Ideally, they should use the experience to gain a sense of responsibility for their actions.

School officials must also take into consideration why a gun is being brought to school in the first place, whether it is loaded, and the intention of the teens in possession of the gun.

Not all cases are the same and not all youths are the same.

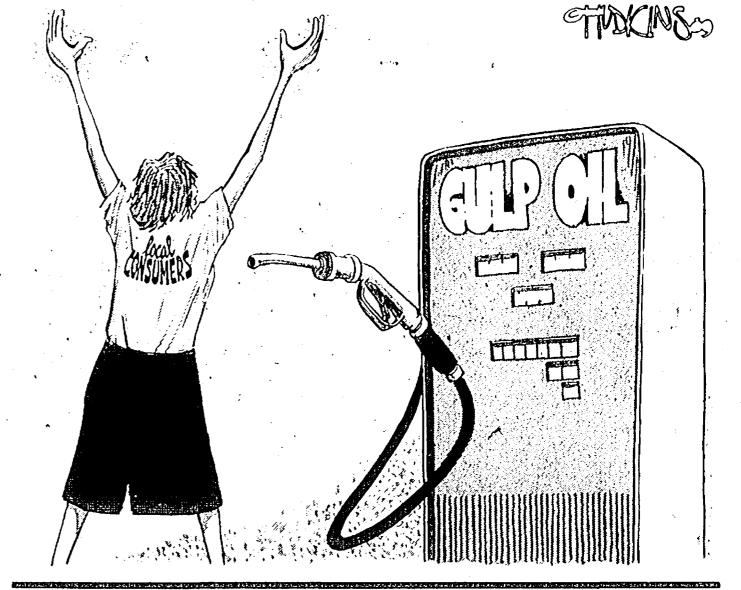

School officials should also make sure that the educational program offered to the expelled student isn't done out of revenge, but a program which meets the needs of the students.

Hopefully, teens sent to an alternative program won't view it as a punishment and be resentful. Ideally, they should use the experience to gain a sense of responsibility for their actions.

While each case should be reviewed on its own merits, students and parents must get the message in a variety of ways to know what is expected of them.

It can be done at student assemblies, letters to parents and newsletters mailed throughout the community.

Talking about the gun issue shouldn't be viewed as a sign of problem — but should be seen

Pondering responsibility

FOR YEARS I felt responsible for it. That nasty business with the BB guns.

All of my friends had them. There were single-shot models, carbine repeaters, pistols.

Mine was a 50-shot, pump-action beauty that was a gift from an uncle who had been, at various times, a policeman, a sailor and a rallroad man. My mother was less than thrilled with his choice of a birthday present for an 8-year-old, but she let me keep it.

I shot at trees and cans and broke a few Coke bottles and Mason jars. Once I shot a bird perched in a tree. When the BB hit him - dead center in the head - his body stiffened, and he clung to his perch for several seconds. Then he tumbled and fell to the ground.

I felt sick. I wanted to throw up. I put the gun down, took the small body to the back of the yard and buried it. I took the gun inside and put it

But when someone fired a pellet at my leg, it bounced off the jeans with no damage. So the game continued, with live ammunition.

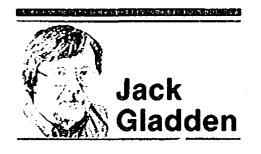

Then it happened. I stuck my head around the corner of our front porch, just as one of my friends pointed his Daisy carbine around the edge of the house and pulled the trigger.

The BB got me right between the eyes. It didn't hurt, but blood was dripping onto the porch railing. For a few seconds I didn't move. In my mind, I saw a bird falling from a tree branch.

When I realized that I wasn't dead or blind, I told my mother I had fallen on a rock. She knew better.

But she was too worried to be angry. My father called it a "damn fool stunt." Nobody, including me, blamed the kid who had shot me. We were all to blame. At least, that's the way we felt then.

WE DIDN'T HAVE television, you sumed the robbers and the killers were mean. Or sick.

They were held accountable for their actions. They were punished. And so, in the BB gun incident, were Now I know that we were wrong. It wasn't our fault.

WE HAD COMIC books. Violepce filled the pages. Superman zapped evil-doers, who, in turn, went after him with kryptonite that they always managed to find somewhere.

We had radio. The Shadow. The Whistler. The Green Hornet. The

But parents and students must be made aware that there is a problem that involves them.

Our schools

More state aid is not enough

HY DO some public school children receive a better education than oth-

The question has tied the state Legislature in knots this past year. It is also the focus of the guide to local schools that appears elsewhere within these pages.

Observer Newspapers reporters examined the question from all angles. They compared local districts not only with each other but also with the districts to which our schools compare themselves.

As material was gathered, several factors became clear.

Michigan's current school aid formula is a failure. Although designed to smooth out financial differences between rich and poor school districts, gross inequality still exists.

Far too often, the quality of a child's education is dependent upon his or her address. The situation is indefensible morally, let alone on legal grounds, and can hardly benefit a society that increasingly demands well-educated, welltrained workers.

It is not as if taxpayers are shirking their responsibilities to local schools. In several instances, home owners in less wealthy districts, with lower property tax assessments, are paying more in school taxes than their neighbors in wealthier districts.

WE ADVOCATE a change in the state aid formula, allowing taxpayers in these financially pressed, heavily taxed school districts to provide their children with an education that, at bare minimum, gives them a fighting chance for success in college or the job market.

To do so, we urge Gov. James Blanchard and Senate Majority Leader John Engler to end their political posturing and lead their fellow Democrats and Republicans to an equitable overhaul of the present system. 9

Lansing politicians may well have to raise taxes, something they are loathe to do. A state sales tax increase could prove the most politically popular option. Regardless, more money is needed for education, and no amount of political sleight-of-hand can obscure that fact:

Simply put, we need a better state aid formula, and we need it now.

But while increased state ald is a solution, it is only a partial solution. Local school boards and that increased state aid would bring to those districts that receive it, we urge each local school district to put its own house in order with regard to educational programming as well as finances.

More money can buy more hardware, but hardware alone is no guarantee of a good education.

MORE MONEY can buy more hardware, but hardware alone is no guarantee of a good education.

A computer cannot benefit a child who cannot read its instruction manual.

Instead of comparing the number of computers in neighboring classrooms, we suggest districts compare the number of students who can spell properly.

Rather than comparing the number of robotics workshops in neighboring high schools, we suggest districts compare the number of students who can perform long division.

While we urge Lansing to provide more money for schools, we also urge our local districts to see to it that the money is spent wisely.

Long-range financial solutions also lie within our local districts.

While we believe an increase in state aid is necessary, we believe local districts could work more closely with local government.

Rather than complaining about their lack of commercial tax base, we urge school officials to work with city and township planners to promote business growth within their mutual territory.

WE ALSO URGE local officials to resist the temptation of commercial and industrial tax breaks, as well as tax increment financing authority districts, knowing that they rob school districts of precious tax revenue.

As we said before, when tax rates and average house sale prices were compared, it become abundantly clear that most local taxpayers are paying plenty to provide for quality schools. For every Plymouth-Canton, where voters have traditionally rejected new taxes, there is a Wayne-Westland, where property owners are taxed to the legal limit.

With each property tax payment, local home-away. I didn't touch it for months.

BUT ONE DAY my friends and I were playing cops and robbers, using our thumbs and fingers as pistols and saying things like "Bam! Bam! You're dead!"

Someone suggested we get our BB guns, take the pellets out and use the guns in the game. At least they made a clicking sound when you pulled the trigger.

After a few minutes of that, and some disputes as to whether a player had been hit or not, it was suggested that we put the BBs back in. Then there would be no doubt as to the accuracy of the hits.

I protested that it was dangerous.

Editorial is criticized

To the editor:

Your editorial on May 4, "Bad Timing - Judicial Complaints Disputed" states that James Netter and I were off base in our timing in filing complaints with the Michigan Judicial Tenure Commission against Judge Gail McKnight. You further stated that we should have complained to the assistant prosecutor in November.

Enclosed is a copy of my letter to Assistant Prosecuting Attorney (Robert) Sheiko dated May 4. While I did complain verbally to Mr. Sheiko in November as soon as I read your paper giving the details of the arralgnments (last November) it was not put in writing until May 4 prior_ to reading your editorial at lunch on May 5.

You will notice from the enclosed letter that I talked with the assistant prosecutor by phone the very day the complaint was signed to inform him of my intention and to make a decision whether to file that day or later.

Until April 17, when the judge signed the sentence agreement accepting a plea of no contest, there was no reason to file a complaint with the Michigan Judicial Tenure Commission. She had not formally committed herself to anything.

Your editorial of April 20 entitled "Case Closed Fraud Punishment is Too Light" files a public complaint about the punishment not fitting the crime.

see. We didn't have social scientists and action committees and concerned parents blaming the tube for instilling in us the notion that violence was a way of life.

No one was saying that it really wasn't our fault, because some electronic device was brainwashing us to believe that it was OK to go around shooting each other. And no one suggested legislation to ban the kind of guns that did the dirty deed.

We were just kids playing cops and robbers, and we got a little carried away.

When we would read about real robberies and murders committed by other people, we knew that such acts were terribly wrong. We as-opening sounds of gunfire let us know that it was time for "Gangbusters."

And we had the movies. Westerns, every Saturday, with heroes whose six-shooters never had to be reloaded. There was so much killing in those movies that we didn't call them Westerns. We called them "shoot 'em ups."

And that's the reason I took a BB in the head. The game we were playing may have been stupid, but it wasn't our fault. The movies made us do it. And radio. And the comics. We weren't responsible at all.

This is an open letter to the people in our community who are concerned about the quality of our water. About six months ago a company began a telephone solicitation campaign asking homeowners if they could come out to their homes to test their water.

A free gift was offered if the homeowner agreed to listen to the presentation. This company has a well-trained sales staff that preys on the public's fear of a tainted water supply and environment. 👘

Their water test compares the quality of the water after it goes through their system to the water that comes out of the tap. The tap water appears to have a slimy accumulation at the bottom of the test tube. The treated water is crystal clear.

The selespers makes cost comparlsons of their system to that of the competition. Naturally the competition's prices are much higher, but upon investigation the competitors' prices are much lower.

Cheese maker made governor underrated

I HAVEN'T had a chance yet to ask Gov, Jim Blanchard if he has read Jean M. Fox's new biography of Fred M. Warner, first man ever elected to three consecutive terms as governor (1905-11).

· Chances are Blanchard either has read it or already has learned the crucial lessons in the final chapter.

Fred Warner? He gets little space in most state histories. A merchant, cheese manufacturer and banker, he rose from Farmington village president to state senator, secretary of state and the big job.

WARNER WAS NO "idea man," and his forgettable speeches had little sparkle, but he was a tall, solid and trusted man, much like Jerry Ford.

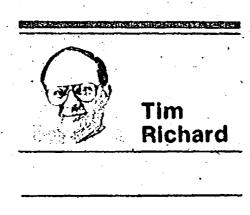

Fox titles him "Progressive Governor" because he advocated so many reforms: a primary for nomination of U.S. senators, laws regulating railroads and life insurance companies, registration of lobbyists, taxation of telephone and telegraph companies, the forerunner of the Department of Natural Resources, the first highway department, labor laws for women and children, factory inspections, and so on.

Warner's tenure covered the 1908 Constitutional Convention, and he , was a champion of its advances notably city home rule and the lineitem veto, my personal favorites.

WHY, THEN, does Warner get so little recognition, particularly compared to his flash-in-the-pan successor?

Jean Fox is a newspaper person as well as history buff, and she may have put her finger on it in the final chapter:

"First, he was immediately followed by the charismatic Chase Os-

IF BLANCHARD hasn't read the Warner biography, he certainly knows about Osborn. He told me so himself several years ago after a chilly parade in Munising.

"I'm the first governor since Chase S. Osborn to carry all 15 counties in the Upper Peninsula," he said. And as readers of this column know, Blanchard is a history buff who would be a formidable contestant on "Jeopardy."

They accuse him of using the Commerce Department budget to promote his administration rather than the state; of "glitz" and ribbon cutting rather than cost cutting; of producing "photo opportunities" instead of legislative compromises; of boiling an alphabet soup of GAIN, MET and TIP rather than going after the billion-dollar road problems.

The State Capitol press corps. grouses that Blanchard bypasses them in favor of local media. I've registered my own complaint - that his state of the state speech was designed as a C-SPAN television extravaganza rather than a solid outline of his programs.

THE INCUMBENT governor, whether or not he has read Jean Fox, has learned the lesson.

Making history is more than doing good. It's making what you do appear good and seeing that you get credit for doing good - now.

Blanchard, like Osborn, intends to cement his reputation while he's still in office, not take a chance that a nice lady like Jean Fox will resurrect his memory 78 years afterwards.

How to pick a school district

Q: We are planning to move. We wondered what we should look for in picking a good school system.

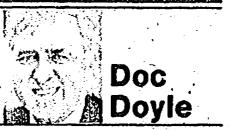

A: The first question you need to ask is what type of community can you afford. You never indicated whether you could afford an affluent district which will have more money; therefore, more resources, probably smaller class sizes and more enrichment activities although not necessarily a better program than a district of a more moderate tax base.

Once you have decided on an affordable area, you need to do some specific research regarding the school district's educational program. You state that your children, grades 7 and 10 are "A-B" students and I say your children can receive a quality education in both an affluent district or one of more modest means if you select the right district and ask the right questions.

Following are some basic considerations:

• Write to selected school districts in the area and ask for information about their school district and community. Obviously, if they send little or no information back. the district hasn't even documented what it is doing.

• Determine what size district you want, a large district or a small district. Some parents prefer a small district so that their children will know the baker and candlestick maker. Some parents prefer a large school system which can be a problem for some children who are coming from a smaller district because large districts tend to be more depersonalized.

The Search

Visit, the school and look at the school facilities. First impressions are important. If you walk into a building and the place is filthy, it certainly can give you a perception, not favorable, of the district's leadership. Note, however, a building can ° be old but still clean. If a building is not well taken care of, teacher's moral is often low. You can give teachers all the staff development and educational theories you want, but if the building is poorly maintained you have a morale problem.

• How are the children evaluated: by grades, checklist, reports?

• Are there parent/teacher conferences, if so, how often? If there are no parent/teacher conferences, that throws a real red flare up. It could be interpreted that the district wants to keep parents out of the schools.

• Share with the building principal what your child's functioning level is via grades and test scores. Will your child have to repeat work that they have already mastered? If the grade or class your child is assigned is ahead of where your child is, will the district take that factor into consideration and allow "catch up" time?

• Visit the building with your child as opposed to having your child walk into the building alone on his/ her first day. It can be frightening for both young children and adolescents entering a new building, seeing new faces.

• Note if the children are well supervised in the building or is there "quasi-rioting" in the hallways? Are the classrooms pleasantly decorated? At the elementary building, are there student projects and materials on the walls or hanging from the ceiling? Does it look like it is an active, alive environment or is it just a .... holding tank until 3 p.m.? When you leave the building do you feel welcome to return?

Talk to the leaders in the local parent organization. Does the school district encourage parents to become involved in activities? Do they have a parent advisory committee or at least PTO/PTA. Do the parents you talk to generally feel satisfied with the overall quality of the teaching staff and program? Keep in mind, however, that some parents find nothing positive about the school, the principal or teachers and will nit-pick every educational issue, Try to determine what the relationship is between the teacher's association and the school district. good relationship usually results in high district morale. What are the test scores; what is the level of stipdent achievement in the district? What are the educational expectations of the school district, are the expectations high enough to meet the expectation you have for your children? Are there support services. available in guidance/counseling, special education, media programs, gifted programs? Are art, music and physical education available at the elementary level? Is there a summer educational recreation program? How many students continue onto college? What type of career training opportunities are there for the non-college student? Is there a strong staff development program? Without a good sound staff development program, teachers and education become stagnant.

The bottom line, as always, is the quality of the commitment of teachers and administrators. Again, whether it is an affluent or moderately financed school district or a district with limited resources, failed, and I'm trying to salvage the competency of the teachers and administrators and the commitment to children will determine if your child receives an enriching experience. ### She enjoys challenge of 'kiddy' dentistry

By Sue Mason staff writer

What person in her right mind, would love having an office filled squalling children who would rather be playing then seeing the dentist?

Mind you, we're not talking about school-age children, we're talking about the diaper brigade.

Well, one dentist who does is Gail Brossok. A Farmington Hills resident, Brossok doesn't mind. She welcomes it.

"Most pediatric dentists love kids," she said. "If you've ever been in a pediatric dentist's office, you realize they have to love them when they're crawling all over the walls."

Brossok, 35, is one of four national spokeswomen for the American Academy of Pediatric Dentists. She divides her time between touting the need to get children to the dentist as soon their first teeth appear, her part-time dental practice in Flint, and full-time job teaching pediatric dentistry at the University of Detroit School of Dentistry.

The academy's goal is a cavity free generation. It's an attainable goal, considering that today 50 percent of children under 18 have no cavities.

Flourides have made a significant impact on dental health and so have preventive treatments such as the use of plastic coatings on the chewing surfaces of teeth.

BUT PARENTAL involvement is the key to fighting tooth decay, according to Brossok.

"Dental cavities are a preventable disease," she said. "But they're not as easy to prevent as getting a childhood shot for a childhood disease. The parents, the child and the dentist have to work as a team."

University of Detroit dental student Vince Monticciolo makes an adjustment to a retainer being fitted for Erin Ard, who passes the

Part of that teamwork involves educating parents on how to take care of their child's teeth, since a youngster can't adequately brush his or teeth until age 6 or floss r properly until age 9, Brossok said.

"If you wait for the child's permanent teeth, it's too late," Brossok said. "A child should really see a dentist by the age of 12 months." During early dental visits, Brossok teaches parents how to clean an infant's teeth with a gauze pad and how to avoid problems like "baby bottle tooth decay."

According to Brossok, an infantshould never be put to bed with a bottle filled with anything but water. Liquids like fruit juice contain sugar and pool around the child's teeth. The juice contains carbthydrates that combine with bacteria in the child's mouth, forming an acid which attacks the teeth and causes "baby bottle tooth decay."

"I saw a 19-month-old child who had decay in six of his eight teeth on the upper level; his brother had the same thing," Brossok said. "It's very, very frustrating. Some parents play Russian roulette and wait to see if their child gets cavities."

Pediatric dentistry wasn't Brossok's first calling in life. She started out as a nurse, working at Columbus Children's Hospital in Columbus, Ohio. She loved her work, but found it "difficult and frustrating."

"I FOUND out it was wrong for me and when I tried to find out what I wanted to do with the rest of my life, I realized I wanted to deal with patients, especially children."

She went back to school and received her post-graduate degree from Ohio State University's School of Dentistry. She finished her residency in 1986 and worked for a year in private practice in Colorado before moving to Michigan. While in Colorado, she was selected to be a national spokewoman for the ACPD.

"I didn't apply for it, but I like it," she said. "It's what I do in private practice, feach the public about dental health."

Granted there are few foods that don't tend to cause tooth decay, but there are some foods that are better than others, Brossok said.

While parents might think raisins and fruit bars are healthy snacks, the fact is a chocolate bar is kinder on teeth. Simple sugars like those contained in chocolate bars clear the mouth in about 20 minutes. Sticky foods like raisins dissolve tooth enamel at twice the rate of table sugar, Brossok said.

Starches like crackers and corn flakes are especially harmful to teeth because the acid attacks can continue for several hours while the starch is broken down into sugar, she added. A good snack food is aged cheese. Children who eat aged cheese tend to have less tooth decay, possibly because the cheese stimulates the saliva to cleanse the mouth and buffers the teeth, Brossok said.

SHORT OF starvation, a big step can be taken by cleaning teeth adequately at least once a day. For a child, brushing before bedtime is the most important time.

And as for the cavity free generation, Brossok feels it can be accomplished by the year 2000.

"Many people don't realize that you should be able to keep your teeth your entire adult life," Brossok said. "And you can, but it depends on how aggressively parents seek and follow through on advice from the dentist."

Third-year dental student Pranav Pandya (left) watches as Dr. Gall Brossok and dental assistant Kathy Czop work on patient Margaret Geck, 5.

Cavities can be prevented

Tooth decay is an elective disease. It often is the • A baby bottle or a breast should never be used a a result of insufficient flouride, eating too frequently pacifier. It can be avoided, if there is teamwork between the child, the parent and the pediatric dentist. But parents must realize that their child should see the dentist after the eruption of the first tooth, not after the arrival of permanent teeth.

Here are a few other things parents should remember in getting their children off on the road to good dental health:

• Foods should not be labeled as "good" or "bad" for teeth. Virtually all foods that children eat can contribute to tooth decay. The determining factors are how the food is eaten, when it is caten and with what it is caten.

Each time food is eaten, bacteria in the mouth re-ineralizes the enamel, making the healed lesion actuallease harmful acids that attack teeth. The more frequently one eats, the more frequent acid attacks the teeth and the more likely cavities are to form. The best time to use a flouride toothpaste is after breakfast and before bedtime.

• A baby bottle or a breast should never be used a a pacifier. When milk, formula, sugar or fruit juice pool around a child's teeth during sleep, the teeth can be attacked by acid for extended periods and cause "baby bottle tooth decay." Only water in a bottle or a clean pacifier should be given to a baby at bedtime.

And, if the child is bottle fed, the shape of the nipple is important because it can affect the muscle development and tooth alignment in a child's mouth.

• Even if a cavity has begun to form, flouride can actually "heal" the tooth surface and make the enamel stronger. If a dentist can catch the formation of a cavity in time, the decay process can be reversed.

Tooth decay occurs when calcium leaves the tooth and enters the saliva. Flouride — found in flouridated drinking water, in supplements and toothpaste — remineralizes the enamel, making the heated lesion actual-

Dear Lorene Green,

2B(L,R,W,G)

I read your column each week and find it most interesting. Many years ago someone gave me a very "quickie" reading of my writing. I have gone through so many changes that it may be most appreciated if this could be done again.

I am divorced and recently moved back to Michigan with two small children. I am trying to make so many decisions about my life that I think the more I could know about me, the better these decisions will be.

I look forward to your response. Thank you.

Dear L.E.

Today, we are looking at the handwriting of a young woman who is ambitious to make her place in the sun. Without a doubt you are a leader and not a follower!

Seemingly, you begin to exhibityour need for independence very early in life. You probably jettisoned traditional values for those which were more suitable to your needs and strong personality. I suspect you were considered a rebel at times.

Your outer demeanor is one of poise and confidence. Emotions are usually kept under control. You experience life through your head more than your heart.

MAGIN STANDIAKA

Executive ability and organizational skills are hallmarks of your personality. You are disciplined and use-time-efficiently. Determination and perseverance are assets to reaching your goals.

Superior mentality and highly creative thinking are pervasive in your handwriting. You do not hesitate to tackle difficult problems. You are clearly able to see what is purposeful and essential. And you can find HEW, YOU'VE survived Mother's Day. Everyone got their gifts and cards on time and phone calls to the out-of-town moms. Yep, Mother's Day 1989 is now history. But it's no time to rest on your laurels. Father's Day is only a month away.

If you want as good of a track record next month as you had on Sunday, better get started now, espeage and where you live. And be sure to include your dad's name.

Once you've done that, drop it in an envelope addressed to Sue Mason, 36251 Schoolcraft, Livonia 48150, by no later than Friday, June 9.

As for you fathers, sit back and relax. Your children won't forget about you. Didn't you know...dads are just as important as moms in this world. viable solutions to present problems.

CULTURAL exposure can also be found in your handwriting. You are not a stranger to such things as art, music and reading. You also have an innate eye for beauty.

These superlative traits contribute to your success in the world of business. However, one area that seems to present problems for you is people relationships. Here you appear to be less secure of yourself. To follow and obey orders is rather alien to your nature.

Seemingly, you have been under the influence of someone with a strong personality and have found this situation difficult to cope with. Some jealousy here probably makes you rebellious, employing sarcastic taunts to make your point.

At present, you have a need for time alone to sort out your life. There are areas here where fulfillment is eluding you. Your intuition and a modicum of humor can be helpful. Once this is accomplished I envision you in a blockbuster career with inner peace.

Whatever it was, we'd like to hear about it.

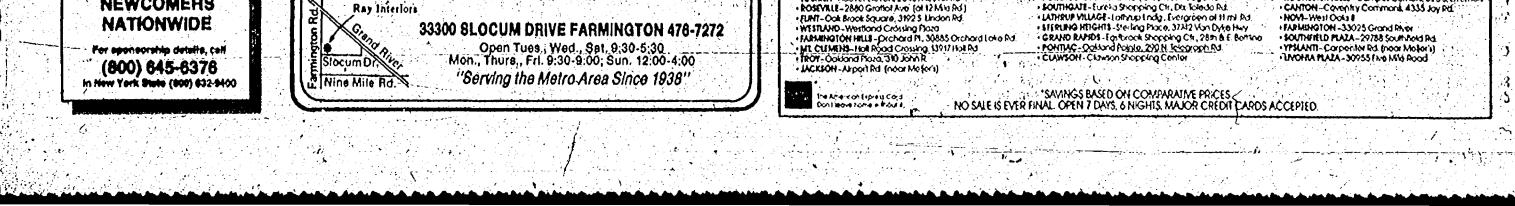

As a tribute to fathers, we are planning a best Father's Day gift story — with the fathers help, of course — for Thursday, June 15. (We'd ask the fathers to help with this one, but they're to busy trying to figure out what to do with the more unusual gifts they've received over the years.)

'Simply irresistible.

THE CLOTHES HAVE been put away; the props dismantled; and the stage lights dimmed for another year.

In retrospect, "Simply Irresistible" rates as the "best" fashion show ever put on by students in the fashion merchandising class at the Livonia Career Center.

"It was the best show we ever had," said instructor Janet Haas. "I know it was."

The annual fashion show attracted an audience of 600 and featured fashions from 40 area retailers, An entire student production, the 11/2-hour show raised an estimated $1,500 for the Rosalyn Bryant Memorial Fund, which works with abused children.

Fashion merchandising students worked on the show since February, contacting the retailers, selecting the music, choreographing the modeling and writing the dialogue.

The students also enlisted the help of friends, with the final tally coming in at 125 students involved in the production. There was a special backdrop and lighting and a "fog machine that was out of this world," Haas said.

Student production managers were Laura Tokarz of Stevenson High School and Jill Helka of Franklin High School. Erika Davert of Stevenson High School was master of ceremonies.

Tokarz coordinated the work of morning students on the show, while Helka handled the afternoon work. The students, Haas said, didn't realize the magnitude of the production "until they saw the entire show at the dress rehearsal."

Special kudos went to Churchill High School graduates Steve Schager and David Chaundy, who helped with the production, and career center principal Steve Smith, Haas said.

The students also selected the charity that would receive the proceeds from the show. In past years, the money has been donated to Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome research, but this year they opted for the local charity.

"They were so moved by the story of Rosalyn Bryant," Haas said. "It's a local organization and an exciting part of the show for the students was that they could relate to the community and be concerned."

The organization also had a thank you for the students, presenting them with a bronze plaque the evening of the fashion show. It now hangs in the career center - "way up high so nothing can happen to it," Haas sald.

Showing off the summer end of the fashion spectrum were Bobby Sonie (left) and Argee Papageorgakis.

Looking "simply irresistible" for the fashion show were Kristen McCallum (from left), Leah Miles, Marlo Sawalka, Colleen Schmidt and Kelly Temple.

The most recent issue includes an article about a Bloomfield Hillsbased group called Career Alternatives, aimed at middle-management people who are out of work. There's another piece about an environmental illness self-help group for people. who suffer from hypersensitivity to chemicals.

"We just try to keep people informed about the fact that self-help is here, and it's a real viable way to get help with their emotional concerns," Young said.

When people join such a group, "they finally hear someone saying what they've been thinking themselves. It makes them feel they are not so alone," she said.

The office fields an average of 400 calls a month from people who are either forming a group or looking for a group to join. If there is no group in the caller's area, the Clearinghouse will give them the number of an individual with a similar problem, "so they can at least talk to one other person that shares their concern," Young said.

Religions: Views mixed about organ transplants

N 1967, Dr. Christiaan Barnard made headlines by performing the first human heart transplant at the Groote Schuur Hospital in Capetown, South'Africa. Today, organ transplants are an everyday occurrence,

But with the advancement of medical technology has come a dilemma for people who question whether organ donations are compatible with their religious beliefs.

A Gallup survey, done several years ago, showed that 95 percent of all Americans have heard something about organ transplants, but only 50 percent are likely to want their organs donated after death.

The survey showed that awareness of organ transplant was as high more than 90 percent — among religious groups, and as with the overall population, the willingness to have organs donated after death hovered around the 47-53 percent mark.

The survey also showed that less than 10 percent of members of religious groups were aware that their religions have laws governing organ and tissue donation.

And while the answers vary from religion to religion, research by agencies like the National Kidney Foundation, have found that a majority of religions support transplantation.

According to the NKF, the Amish will consent to transplantation, if they are certain that it is for the health and welfare of the transplant recipient. However, they are reluctant to donate their organs, if the outcome is considered questionable.

"THE AMISH believe that since God created the human body, it is God who heals," said John Hostetler, a world renowned authority on Amish religion. He added that "nothing in the Amish understanding of the Bible forbids them from using modern medical services including surgery, hospitalization, dental work, anesthesia, blood transfusions or immunizations."

Among Catholics, organ donation is viewed as an act of charity, fraternal love and self-sacrifice, and transplants are ethically and morally acceptable to the Vatican.

"We encourage donation as an act of charity," said Leroy Wickoski, director of the Office of Health Affairs of the Archdiocese of Chicago. "It is something good that can result from tragedy and a way for families to find comfort in helping others.

"We do caution, however, that the organs are removed only after death and that people's wishes are respected."

Christian Scientists, on the other hand, take no specific position on transplants or organ donations as distinct from other medical or surgical procedures.

According to the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Mass., Christian Scientists normally rely on spiritual rather than medical means for healing. They are free, however, to choose whatever form of medical treatment they desire, including an organ transplant. And the question of organ donation is the individual decision of church members.

The Jehovahs Witnesses, like Christian Scientists, believe organ donation is a matter of individual conscience, although the religion doesn't encourage organ donation, according to the Watch Tower Society, the legal corporation for the religion.

ALTHOUGH THE group is often assumed to ban transplantation because of its taboo against blood transfusion, it does not oppose donating of receiving organs, according to the society. However, all organs and tissue must be completely drained of blood before transplantation.

Similarly, Protestanism,, while encouraging and endorsing organ donation, respects individual conscience and a person's right to make decisions regarding his or her own body, a NKF spokesman said. In fact, the Lutheran Church-Missourl Synod was the first denomination to encourage donation with the adoption of a resolution and the largest distribution of donor cards ever through an issue of Lutheran Witness magazine.

"We accept and believe that our Lord Jesus Christ came to give life and came to give it in abundance," said the Rev. James Rassbach of the Board of Communication Services, Missouri Synod. "Organ donation enables more abundant life, alleviates pain and suffering and is an expression of love in times of tragedy."

The Jewish religion teaches that saving a human life takes precedence over maintaining the sanctity of the human body, although a direct organ transplant is preferred.

"If one is in the position to donate an organ to save another's life, it's obligatory to do so, even if the donor never knows who the beneficiary will be," said Moses Tendler, an orthodox rabbi who is chairman of the biology department at Yeshiva University in New York City and chairman of the Bio-ethics Commission of the Rabbinical Council of America.

"THE BASIC principal of Jewish ethics — 'the infinite worth of the human being' — also includes donation of corneas, since eyesight restoration is considered a life-saving operation," he said.

The Moslem Religious Council initially rejected organ donation by followers of Islam in 1983, but it has reversed its position, provided donors consent in writing in advance. It also maintains that the organs of Moslems must be transplanted immediately and not be stored in organ banks.

"We have no policy against organ donation as long as it is done with respect for the deceased and for the benefit of the recipient," said Dr. Abdel-Rahman Osman, director of the Muslim Community Center in Maryland.

Hurt is shared when marriage fails

· Are men monsters?

A large billboard in Ferndale, advertising a marriage counseling service, suggested they were and that men are the cause of divorce. The bride pictured looked like an angel. The groom behind her was portrayed as a demon.

In real life, this caricature of the relation of the sexes seems to prevail. Men are usually the cause of divorce. Women are the victims. Is this really true?

I remember a man telling me about his divorce. He admitted that he had lost control of his anger. He added, "She drove me crazy."

Anyone who works with couples knows the dynamics of marriage problems is complex. It is not just a case of persecutor and victim. As the old saying goes, if a woman feels wronged by a man; he will get it back one way or another.

The image of men in our society is affected by the news media. Stories describe violence between the sexes. The reports of rape are especially troubling. From all this, the image of men becomes more and more tarnished. The view becomes more biased.

WE CANNOT continue to view men as brutish monsters and women as simply the victims. We need to realize that when men and women face trouble in their relationships they are equally hurt.

Women talk more about their problems than men. This makes a difference. Yet, in my counseling and contact with men, I see them hurt just as deeply. How can we change this picture?

Let us not fuel the conflict between the sexes. We can begin by reducing the blaming that we do. Too many women who seek counseling say it is the man who caused the breakup. Blaming does not solve anything. It does not ensure another satisfying marriage.

Statistics on marital success suggest that problems are not resolved by the second time around. Attitudes are set into place that increase the likelihood of more trouble. I believe the blaming is a central problem. I believe that just as it takes "two to tango," it takes two to build a problem to the point of divorce.

Second, men need to talk more easily about the problems they face. I.HAVE worked with people in divorce and in grief support groups for 15 years. The men who come are few and far between. Women avail themselves of such help. Men do not. Men will talk about the financial disaster of divorce. They seldom talk about the personal disaster.

Men are not monsters. Women are not angels. Let us not fuel the conflict between the sexes. We need to recognize that there is a person there. This person needs support. This person needs to explore his or her own mistakes. Blaming does not help.

Men especially need to open up so as to rebuild their wholeness as a person.

The alarming divorce rate and the breakup of families needs to be reversed. Changing our attitudes in the right direction can help. We must not pander to the problem.

Homes return to families By Debbie L. Sklar

special writer

There's no place like home for starting a business.

But once a business gets off the ground, family, clients and even city officials can sometimes gang up on the entrepreneur, forcing him or her to seek a new address.

"I realized it was time to move agement Services, a Bloomfield Hills marketing company. He started working from his home four years ago. Although he usually met with clients outside of his home office, it was the need to hire a staff that started his search for outside space. In 1986 he moved to an 850-squarefoot building in Birmingham where he employed a staff of two.

Because Marx had worked six-day wanted and be my own boss." But he also recalled the disadvantages.

STEVE CANTRELL/staff photographer

"Menial things like having to make outside trips to the post office and bank got to be a pain. When you're in a building it's a lot easler. You can either have someone run those errands or they provide it within."

He also said a home office can be hurt business if clients believe thereis "a stigma about going to some-. one's home to conduct business."

with the purchasing power of $3,500 per month today.

At age 62, Social Security will provide $850 per month (inflation adjusted) of these retirement needs. Larry is also entitled to receive a payment of $1,000 per month for 10 years from a former employer's pension plan. Because he will not need this income stream currently, this effectively adds another $120,000 to his asset base by age 62. The remainder of his retirement income must come from his savings.

IF HIS ASSETS continue to grow at a reasonable rate - in line with historical norms - the Holtons should be able to maintain their desired standard of living throughout their joint life expectancies. This will be likely even without major additions to their current investment assets. Because Larry will likely add additional investments over the next 10 years (they have no major financial obligations), Larry and Pam should be able to add a cushion to their current savings. Any additional investment will allow them to retire at a higher standard of living or allow Larry to retire earlier if he so chooses. Overall, the retirement goal of 10 years from now appears to be easily reachable.

If Larry's current employer does not have a retirement plan in which Larry is an active participant, he should continue to fund Individual Retirement Accounts annually for the maximum amount of $2,250 (part of which must be in Pam's name). These contributions are tax deductible and the income is tax deferred until withdrawal. The tax deferral will allow these assets to grow at a faster rate.

Perhaps Larry can encourage his employer to implement a 401(k) cash or deferred account plan. These plans allow the employee to defer compensation up to $7,600 per year (adjusted for cost of living annually) into the plan and provide for a tax deferral of income earned on those amounts. This could reduce Larry's current income taxes because his taxable take-home pay would be less.

Larry and Pam have paid careful attention to their estate planning. Each of them have a will, and Larry has a revocable living trust. These types of trusts, often referred to as "loving trusts" because they are de-signed to protect loved ones, are designed to provide for an orderly transition of assets between spouses and then children, and to provide for minimizing estate taxes and probate costs., We strongly suggest that the Holtons review their estate planning every four or five years to make sure that asset changes, family changes or tax law changes do not necessitate changes in their estate plan.

Assets are often titled in the name of a living trust prior to the death of the person who sets up the trust in order to mimimize probate and tax-

The Bottom Line

Financial strengths

- Strong financial position; little debt.
- Excellent auto and home coverage; adequate life insurance
- Have recent wills and trust
- Have almost paid off home mortgage
- Vested pension plan from former employer
- Good investment balance

Financial weaknesses

Lack of financial benchmarks to measure progress.

est Most of Holton's investment assets are already titled in the name of the living trust, but Larry should make sure the beneficiary designations on any retirement plans and IRAs are properly titled. If Larry and Pam want to retain the option of allowing Pam to defer tax on Larry's refirement benefils at his death by making an IRA rollover, Pam should be named as the primary beneficiary with the living trust as the contingent beneficiary.

We would also suggest that the Holtons consider executing durable powers of attorney that would allow them to act on the other's behalf and direct assets in the event one of them became incapacitated. Without this power of attorney, a legal guardianship would be required to con-trol the assets of the incapacitated person. Many medical institutes also require this guardianship procedure for admitting incapacitated patients. This procedure can be costly and time-consuming.

LARRY AND PAM'S investment portfolio is unusally well balanced for an individual not receiving professional advice, and they are to be congratulated on this. We note two points that they might want to address.

First, their liquid reserve funds are currently kept in a tax-free money market fund that is earning less than 5 percent at present. Though the Holtons are in a high tax bracket, we believe they would maximize their return in a fully taxable money market fund at this time. Most of these funds are earning more than 9 percent currently, and even if a 33 percent tax is paid on this income, the after-tax return would increase to more than 6 percent. This should, of course, be reviewed periodically because there are many periods in

IF IT HADN'T been for the Oak Park zoning commission, Ray Epstein and Ida Cohen might never have benefitted from the success Ray & Ida's Dress Shop has achieved since opening a store in Oak Park and a second in Southfield.

Epstein took her husband's advice to "start from the bottom" literally if she wanted a career as a department store buyer. But rather than work as a salesperson as he suggested, she and her mother opened a discount dress shop in the basement of her mother's Oak Park home .27 years ago.

The mother-daughter duo stayed in the basement for a few years until the zoning commission ordered them to move. So they did - to the upstairs bedroom.

"They made it difficult for us. Eventually we had to leave," Epstein said. "We opened in Oak Park because at the time it was a happening place to be. We were successful from day one. When we had our sales on Sunday, we used to have someone watch the door because people stood in line," she said.

Ten years ago a second store opened in Applegate Square.

While Epstein has fond memories of working out of her mother's home, she remembers that "people didn't have any regard for our privacy. We had visitors at night, the weekends and even on holidays.

"Now I have a bookkeeper, 18 employees, and it's a lot better than working out of the home." Even so, she and her mother wanted to hang on to the security the home offered.

"Although we're happy with our move from the basement to the storefront, if the zoning commission hadn't come in, we would have stayed at home a lot longer. When we opened Oak Park, we were nervous about taking on the overhead. It was a big step."

HARRIET RANDALL'S career has taken her from classroom to print shop to home and back outside again. Tired of teaching, she began free-lance writing at home after classes. She soon discovered that how her work looked was as important as what it said.

"I started working with graphics, typesetting and computers at a friend's house," Randall said. Before long, Randall, à Livonia resident, was working at a print shop and leaving her school days behind. On the side she worked out of her home producing brochures.

"People just started coming to me by word of mouth," she said. "It was really tough trying to keep a fulltime job during the day and coming home to work in the evenings."

After two years, she quit her day job and worked solely from her home.

"I couldn't start up in an office because of economic reasons," she said. "I already was paying rent on the home so setting up an office didn't cost me anything:"

Randall listed the advantages to working at home: setting her own schedule, saving gas and commuting time, and a work wardrobe that included "fuzzy bathrobe and comfortable slippers."

"One of the main disadvantages is that some people think just because you work out of your home, you're open 24 hours a day," she said. "It was also a little bit hard trying to separate being mom from being the businesswomad."

In January, she gave up the fuzzy bathrobe to open a typesetting shop, R&W Typehouse 'in . Southfield, thanks to the growth of her business and the need to be in a more commercial area.

Family needs to fine tune investments in stocks

amassed a considerable portfolio of individual stocks. Unless they are particularly astute or interested in spending a significant amount of time following a number of specific stock issues, they should consider putting a portion of these assets under professional management.

This can be accomplished either through the use of mutual funds or by using an asset manager who would choose a portfolio of individual stocks for him on a fee basis. If he investigates this area carefully, he will be able to find companies that consistently produce above average returns for investors. Thus, they might be able to make more effective use of the dollars allocated to the stock market. The decision whether to use professional management is one more of personal preference than of necessity.

Although the Holtons' financial. condition seems to be unusually well structured, a surprising weakness is that Larry does not have adequate disability insurance. His employer provides one year of disability coverage. Subsequently, all employment income would stop.

Larry is certainly not yet at the point of financial independence, and any disability could impair his ability to reach financial goals. We would advise Larry to purchase a guaranteed renewable personal disability income policy that would pay benefits against disability until age 65 if he were to be disabled. To keep the premiums as low as possible, he might want to choose a one-year waiting period. This is the period after the onset of the disability before benefits are paid.

The Holtons received an income tax refund of $4,000 for this 1988 tax year. Although it was probably nice to receive this amount in a lump sum, this money was being held by the federal government for a number of months. It could have been in the Holtons' bank account earning interest for them.

We would suggest they review their tax situation with their accountant to determine whether the 1989 withholding continues to be too high. If so, completing a new W-4 form at his personnel office would be to his advantage.

All things considered, Larry and Pam have made their money into an excellent servant that will provide for them well into the future.

New Japanese models have Germans worried

By Dan McCosh special writer

. Not since the Russians entered the Berlin suburbs have the Germans been as nervous as they are today waiting for the launch of two new Japanese luxury cars.

Not that there is even a crack in German faith in their ability to build locks, clocks and cars, but they are acutely aware that the future of the luxury car business depends mainly on what the crazy Americans are going to do next.

Automotive status in Germany still can be built with a few speed records, a couple of wins in Formula One racing and a nice display at the Frankfort auto show.

But Americans are something else in the one-upping department jumping around from Cadillacs to BMWs to Saabs to Jeeps, although mainly standing by Mercedes -acar thought of as a nice taxicab by most Germans. The only common denominator in the U.S. status business is that the car probably ought to be from some country we defeated in World War II.

Regardless, there is smugness in Stuttgart and Munich, the hallowed halls of industrial design that produce Audis, BMWs, Mercedes and Porsches. The thought that a Japanese auto company could knock them off the status ladder is as unthinkable as losing their lead in cameras and binoculars.

In fact, on the eve of the launch of the Toyota Lexus and Nissan Infiniti lines, the musings in Munich lend to dwell on how these upstarts aren't "established" in the American psyche as, say, a BMW is.

IT'S A STRANGE line of reasoning, considering a scant dozen years ago nobody in the United States had heard of BMW either. In fact, as recently as seven years ago, a BMW was a curiosity, not a status symbol. Twenty years ago, a Mercedes was an oddity in the back of Studebaker dealerships -- and an Alfa Romeo was a more recognizable marque. Rolls Royce had a certain panache for a while, as did Jaguar.

The prominence of German status cars, when it did begin to develop sometime in the mid-1970s, seemed to be rooted in Hollywood and Wall Street. They had become distinctly expensive, well out of reach of the successful working class.

Mercedes managed to maintain a certain stodginess that appealed to numbers runchers, while BMW emphasized performance, a more youthful porting image - just the ticket fo a successful software entreprend or a drug dealer.

BUT AN fame, once gained, last forever Witness the plight of Porschewhich is shrinking so drainatical there is talk in Germany of a goernment-sponsored bailout. Merceds sales are soft, and BMW continut to play brinkmanship with continully escalating prices. And then the is Audi, with troubles of its own, It's pt only thinkable that the Japane could inherit the upper echelor of automotive stardom, it is likely ilthough my opinion is that Hondawill emerge on top, rather than Tyota or Nissan. And it will take aproximately five more years.

The are just two constants in the statuslymbol business in the U.S. car miket. One is that success inevitably listributes too many cars to too may people, leading to a watering don of the image.

Theecond is that there isn't much interet in being second best. Beyond that, le status game is open to anybody

Business demands ideas By Mary DiPaolo identify a variety of new product

special writer

It has been estimated that just one of every 50 ideas ever makes it through the product development process. The first step of the process is called idea generation and represents the time when new ideas are identified for potential development.

These ideas may come from customers, competitors, company staff or a variety of other sources. Overall, it is the imaginative exploration of customer perceptions, needs and wants that helps a company spot new idea opportunities.

This line of thinking led the Maryland Cup Corp., the world's largest producer of paper drinking straws ideas.

THE SCREENING step it olves running new ideas through a series of product-market screening criteria. These criteria include both quanlitative and qualitative components.

The quantitative components summarize the objectives of the business in terms of sales, profit and return on investment for each new product idea. The qualitative components summarize what kind of business the company wants to be in, what business it wants to exclude, what weaknesses it should avoid, and upor. what strengths and trends it should build.

New ideas passing screening would be those that can be transformed into product strategies the

At first glance, it might seem that both dollars are worth the sam amount. Much like the interest earned from two time deposits with the same rates and terms. Well, don't be fooled by appearance Because not all banks calculate interest the same way.

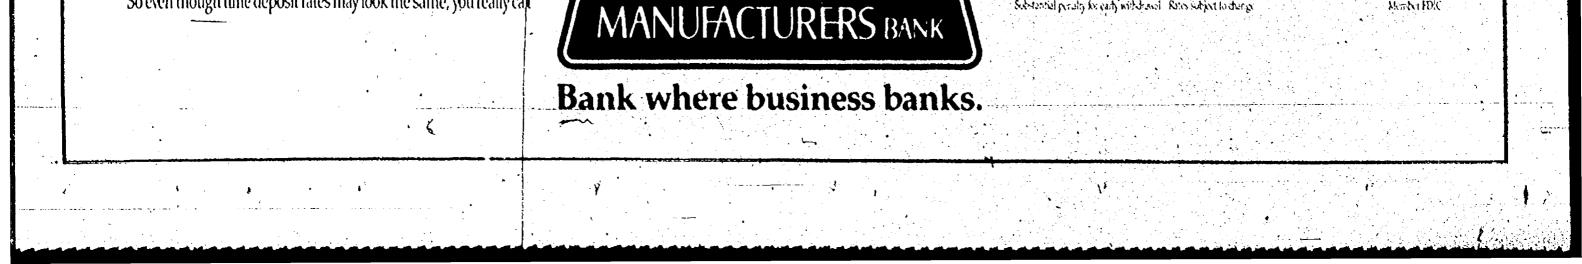

While some other banks offer you simple interest on your tire deposit of one year or longer, Manufacturers Bank compounds yo interest monthly. So, instead of just earning interest on your depos you earn interest on your interest, too. Month after month. So even though time deposit rates may look the same, you really cat

Start small, child care expert urges business

By Tim Richard stalf writer

cali

"It's the 'up and coming business of the '90s.' "

It also arouses guilt feelings in parents - worries about abandoning a baby, fears the child will be abused.

It's a budget headache for employers who want to do right for valuable workers because costs gyrate erratically:

Child care is a "very, very inti-mate benefit to put into your corporation," said Marsha Kneese, who directs the Carriage House Nursery for the Ann Arbor advertising-marketing firm called Group 243.

"Start small. You can grow big. You can't start big and then take the benefit away," she said last week in a workshop that was part of the Michigan Small Business Day Forum in the Novi Hilton, Group 243, she said, started with the Cadillac of benefits - on-site child care."

The company's 125 employees send 43 children, ages 2 weeks to 5 years, to Carriage House. Total cost of $200,000 is subsidized 20 percent by the company. Each parent pays. $95 to $125 a week, depending on the age of the child, and sends lunch. For that, the child gets two snacks, a teacher for 10 hours a day and a "play-based system" that is more educational than plopping a kid in front of a TV set.

Start-up costs, Knessi said, were $20,000 in donated furniture and a zoning battle with neighbors.

THERE ARE cheaper options than the Cadillac, at least for starters, she said.

• Community Coordinated Child Care Reporting and Referral Service. a non-profit, state-aided agency in Oakland, Wayne and several other counties. "It tells you what places are available. It doesn't tell you if spaces are available, aniit doesn't tell you if they're good or ad." • An enhanced referil service

- It guaranees availabilis of space. • Flextime and job shring. "Often in smaller firms, that very possible. As parents appreciate it, they become more loyal (to te company)."

• A consortium of ompanies. Costs can be shared, bution must carefully settle the questios of control and subsidizing sourcet

• Parenting seminars. Fing in a university expert for the cost of lunch and a "thank you." luilt-ridden parents have a chand to network and find support amor peers.

• Voucher or reimbursement -Eastman Kodak reimburses employees in part when they use approved day care. In Michigan, the state insists, for tax purposes, that the money go to licensed care providers. It's still uncommon in Michigan.

To be licensed, Knessi said, a home child care provider receives a three-hour inspection visit from a state Department of Social Services woeker and attends a two-hour orientation. A licensee is limited to six children.

Knessi discussed the abuse issue, saying "there's very little abuse in day care centers compared to abuse in families. You see more abuse in day care homes than in day care centers.

"But it's very demanding work because the kids are all about the same age.

"About 85 percent of the teachers have BA degrees; and 85 percent earn under $15,000 per year. There is high turnover."

Child care was born in the 19th century as a philanthropic aid for for immigrant families. During World War II, it was a necessity when women were replacing men in industrial plants. After the war, widows and divorced women used it. Today more professional women are turning to child care.

Yield from GNMAs isn't all it's cracked up to be

Recently I had a very pleasant, but intense, argument with my client, C.B., over the true yield he is receiving on his GNMA investment.

C.B. argued, quite correctly, that he receives 12 percent from his GNMA fund even though in today's market of 9 percent would appear to be quite attractive. In this article I will demonstrate the problem of calculating the true yield from a GNMA fund.

STANDARD YIELD: Calculation _ cated. Compare the yield to the latof the standard yield in the case of a no-load fund is relatively easy. Divide the previous 12 month's dividends by the net asset value (NAV). Then study the average maturity and the quality of the portfolio.

These two independent variables will have an effect on yield, with the old truism, "high risk equals high return," still applicable.

The next step is a bit more compli-

Going Out of Business FINAL WEEKEND !! THE

Store closes for the final time Monday night, May 22, at 10pm. All goods are out of the warehouses and on the showroom shelves (finally!), so what you see is what we've got. Some China and Storeware sets remain; many new one of a kind or small lots from the final warehouse clearout. Best prices on what may be the one of a kind item you will treasure forever. And need we say:

est 12-month performance.

The latest 12-month performance is the total return of the fund, which equals the sum of the dividends and the capital gains during that period added to the recent NAV, divided by the NAV a year ago. The 12-month performance figure should be greater than the yield.

THE GNMA YIELD: The GNMA yield calculation is more complicated. Assume the ABC GNMA fund shows a 12-month yield of 10.3 percent and a total return of 6.1 percent. Here is how the NAV calculation is done:

Year ended 12	-31-1988
Income	$1.90
Expenses	(0.20)
Net Income	$1.70
Distributions	(1.72)
Net realized and unreal	ized
gain (loss) on investmer	nts (0.77)
	(0.79)
NAV beginning of perio	d $15.94
NAV end of period	$15.15

Note that the fund paid more in dividends ($1.72) than what was available after expenses ($1.7). The key to this puzzle is in the losof investments.

The explanation lies in the lct that this fund had included in le portfolio high-coupon mortgags by buying them for more than fat value. High coupons allow theund to make large distributions, wich increase the yield.

When the mortgages backingthe GNMA are paid off due to refinancing or people moving, ie holder receives the portfolio ofhe mortgage's principal assigned ) the certificate. Unable to reinvest is money at a high rate, the fund bes part of the premium it paid to igh coupon payments.

The investor may have though that he or she received large dividend payments, and certain paid tax on them, but the true yild was much less than the perceive yield.

Let us now compare yield and performance for ABC GNMA fund for the year ending Dec. 31, 1988:

 $\underline{distributions} = yield$ final NAV

 $\underline{$1.72} = 11.4\%$ $15.15 ending NAV + distributions = 12month performance beginning NAV

15.15 + 1.72 = 5.8%15.94

Note that during 1988 the investor's wealth has increased only 5.8 percent because of the principal erosion.

Actually, things are worse than they seem, because the investor paid taxes on the money that was actually a return of capital.

Technically, this situation can be corrected when the shares are sold at a loss, but most investors neglect to recognize this tax loss and hence miss that opportunity.

So the moral of the story is this: If you think you are receiving an unusually high yield on your GNMA fund, think again. It may be too good to be true.

Court's ruling may not end abortion battle

By Peggy Aulino staff writer

The U.S. Supreme Court will not use the abortion case currently before it to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

That educated guess may be the only matter both pro-life and prochoice forces agree upon when it comes to the controversial issue.

Edward R. Grant, a Chicago attorney and president of Americans United for Life Legal Defense Fund, told a group of pro-life proponents Friday not to get their hopes up about the pending Supreme Court de-, cision.

"I don't think we should expect that Roe vs. Wade will be overturned." said Grant. "It's too much to assume that the court, despite the new appointments, will turn around this quickly."

THE SUPREME Court is considering the case of Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services, a Missouri case that stems from a state law re--gulating abortion. Last November, the Reagan Administration filed a friend of the court brief asking that the justices consider using Webster to overturn Roe vs. Wade. The 1973 Roe decision legalized abortion.

Pro-choice proponents agree that the Missouri case is unlikely to lead to the elimination of legalized abortion.

"I don't believe that Roe is going to be overturned with this case," said Carmon Franco, administrator of Womancare, a chain of area family planning clinics whose services include abortion. "I would like to believe that the issue has been settled."

BUT GRANT, at a speech sponsored by Right to Life-Lifespan of Metro Detroit, said that the pro-life movement will continue its efforts to get Roe overturned. The language of the court's decision in the Missour case could provide "ammunition to continue to bring cases to the court and continue to have this issue addressed.

modest expectations, but this could be the case that helps us turn the corner," Grant said.

Franco said Grant's assertion that the Missouri case will not get Roe overturned is the first time she has heard of a pro-life supporter making that concession.

"THEY HAD very high hopes that this would in fact be the case." Franco said. "The mood in the country may not be as supportive as they would like it to be."

Grant told the group of approximately 50 Lifespan members that the Missouri case itself may be re-down a state law, passed in 1986, that required medical tests be done on the fetus and put a ban on performing abortions in public facilities (including hospitals) unless the mother's life is in danger. The law also says life begins at conception. but the appeals court said a state cannot "adopt a theory of life." Grant said. He called that part of the law "a very important provision."

"(THE PROVISION) brings the issue of the beginning of life back before the Supreme Court in a way that has not happened since 1973," Grant said. "I think that's a very important development."

But to the pro-choice side, the abortion rights issue is a women's rights issue.

"What better way to oppress women?" said Jo Isgro, a member of the Western Wayne County chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW).

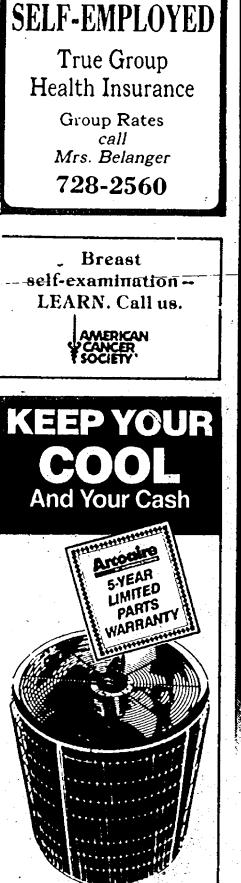

"If they do reverse Roe vs. Wade, then they're going to go after the Pill, then they're going to go after the IUD - 'killing a potential life' they'll call it," Isgro said.

Senate plan would ease toxic ash disposal

AP - Toxic ash produced by municipal trash-burning incinerators could be buried in special landfill cells under legislation approved by a Senate committee.

The bill, intended to clear the way for, such incinerators to operate more freely in Michigan, would ease regulation of the ash as now detailed by the state Department of Natural Resources.

The measure, which has passed the House in a different form, now goes to the full Senate. It is being closely followed by several municipal solid waste authorities and by environmentalists who charge it's still inadequate.

The bill would require that incinerator ash be burled in specially constructed cells in regular landfills. Until the bill passes, ash must be burled in more expensive hazardous . ronmental Affairs Committee, which waste landfills.

The ash controversy has stalled or threatened several active or planned municipal incinerators in Michigan, including ones in Jackson, Detroit, Macomb County and Grand Rapids.

Incinerators are a recommended option in Wayne County's newly proposed solid waste disposal plan, though reductions in waste and recycling are also recommended.

WESTLAND AND Garden City incinerate their waste. Livonia, Redford Township, Plymouth and Canton and Plymouth townships currently do not.

The bill has been strengthened considerably since it passed the House, said Sen. Vernon Ehlers, R-Grand Rapids and chairman of the Senate Natural Resources and Enviapproved the measure Thursday.

The bill calls for $2 million bonds to be posted by authorities operating such a landfill, stringent control of dust which may be toxic, thicker liners to be used in the landfill to protect against leaking, loads of ash to be covered and kept dampened, testing of the ash and monitoring of any leaking material.

Ehlers said burning trash is better than burying it in regular landfills.

"It's still a more expensive option, but it's an environmentally preferable option to dumping it in the ground," he said.

However, Anne Wolwode, conservation representative of the Sierra Club, said that the federal Environmental Protection Agency affirmed before Congress Thursday a tough position on incinerator ash.

The EPA rules call for incinerator ash to be tested before going to a solid waste landfill, and if toxic be sent to a more protective and more expensive - hazardous waste landfill.

"This legislation is in direct contradiction to federal policy," she said:

"WHAT'S BEEN done will not ensure that it will-remove the hazardous material from the waste stream."

Under an amendment adopted by the committee, only the Jackson landfill could operate without a clay liner as part of the protection system. All ash landfill would have to have synthetic liners and leachate collection systems to catch leaking materials.

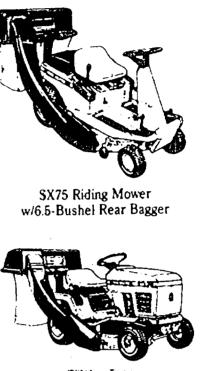

The bill was approved on a 4-0 vote. In related action, the committee passed a bill to require a $6 deposit fee for lead-acid automobile batteries. Buyers could get their money back when they returned the batteries for recycling.

The money collected would go into a special state fund to reimburse retailers and others who collect the batteries.

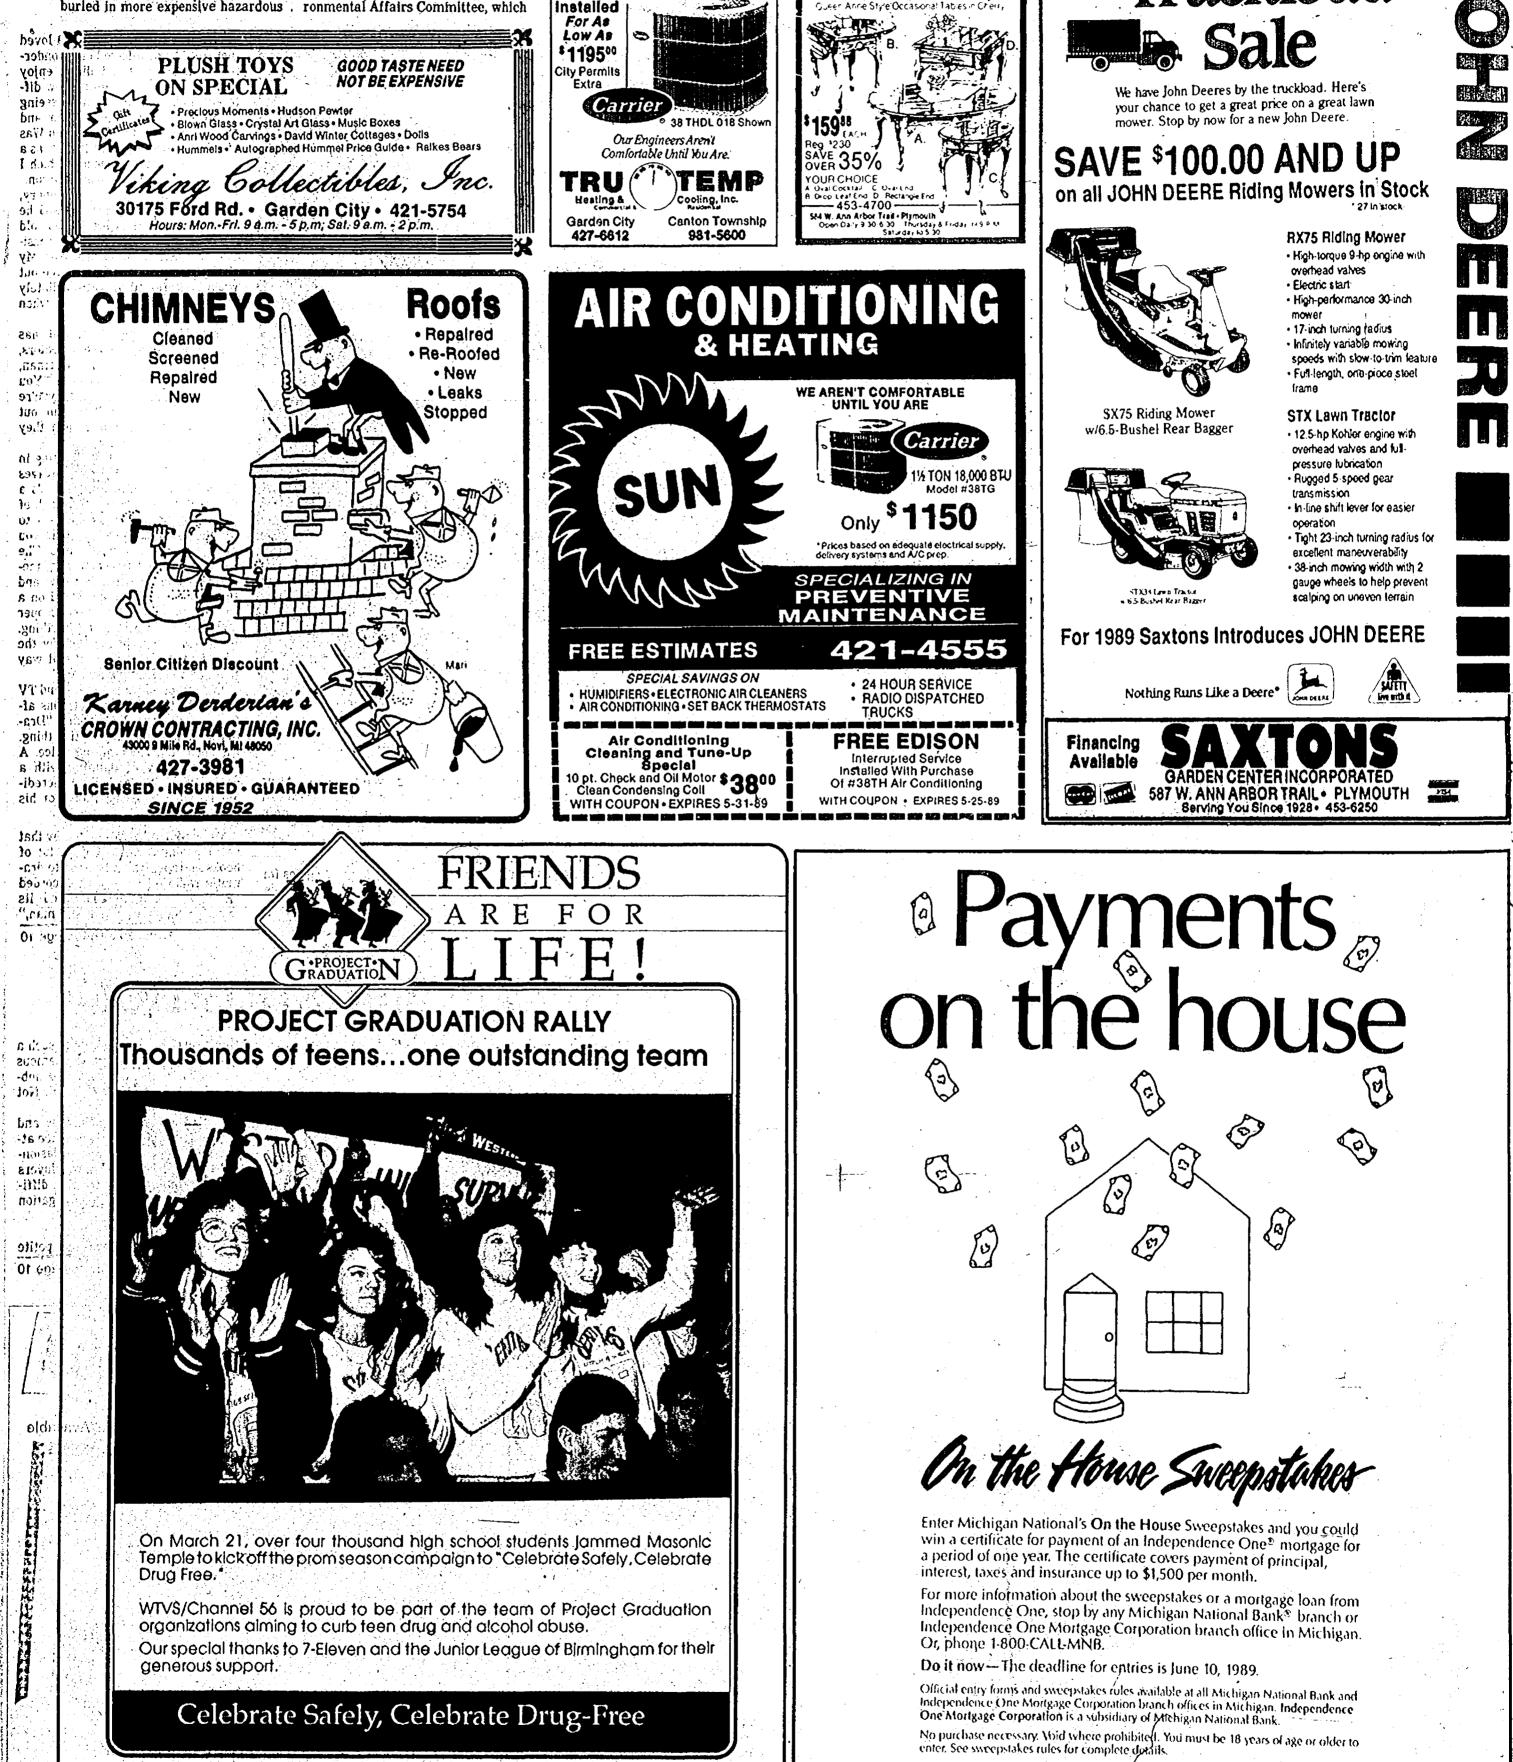

The bill is intended to keep lead, which is toxic, out of garbage bound for incineration or landfills in Michigan. Ehlers, said batteries are the largest contributor of lead in the environment. ....

A man for all media he's a versatile artist

By Dan Greenberg special writer

ODDY MCDOWALL is a consummate actor in every medium - stage, screen, television and radio - and also is a director, writer and photographer.

He is one of the few performers blessed with a brilliant, half-century-long, still-thriving career. From his broad range of media experience, McDowall has derived profound understanding of the actor's craft and the wide, interactive range of the media.

McDowall visited the Detroit area last week to promote his newest film, "Fright Night II," which is a continuation of the successful Part I. The sequel business being what it is, it's surprising that Number III is not yet on the drawing boards.

"Fright Night – Part II" is cast in the popular vampire genre. It stars McDowall as a late-night-TV horror film host who is more debonair than courageous but, nonetheless, must face up to the sister of the vampire he (and others) destroyed, in Part I.

McDowall, who was born in England before World War II, said, "My mother wanted very much to be in the movies so she did the next best thing and got me into the movies at the very early age of 8."

"SCRUFFY," HIS FIRST film, "was made in 15-20 days and never seen, just shown once at 9 a.m. to

"SOME PEOPLE say, 'Oh, I loved that film. It must have been wonderful to make it,' but I didn't enjoy making it," he said. Noting how different making a film is from seeing it, McDowall explained, "Over and above the fact that 'How Green Was My Valley' was a great film, it was a most particular experience, which I remember with enormous affection.

"John Ford was extraordinary, but I was only 12 years old and he knew how to deal with a 12-year-old in the most imaginative and sensitive manner. 'How Green Was My Valley' was almost 50 years ago but when I see the film, it immediately triggers memories of the day when certain things were done."

In his long career McDowall has worked for many famous directors, including the legendary German, Fritz Lang, in "Manhunt." "You have to be very clever when you're directing children or you can put them off their feed and then they won't cough up," he said.

The differences between acting in the various media also engages McDowall's sensibilities. "There's a different intangible truth to each of the media. In the theater you have to fill the room while in a movie you must never act past the lens. The slight difference between long, medium and close shots is there and that's why people would stand on a movie set and watch Gary Cooper and think he wasn't doing anything. But he was doing just enough for the camera to read it in a special way meet the quota," he said. In those days, the British government required that a certain percentage of films shown in England had to be home-made in order to protect the British film industry from domination by Hollywood, McDowall pointed out. From ages 8-12 he made numerous "quota" films in England.

"It was a wonderful training ground for actors, like the old Hollywood studios or, in the '50s, the "Golden Age" of television in New York, a gigantic gymnasium for people to build careers because if you failed on Monday, it didn't mean you couldn't work on Tuesday." McDowall observed, "There's so little production now that everything rides on one film . . . which takes so long ... and it's harder to get a project going than to do it these days because the studio machinery is not in constant, full swing. It's difficult now for careers to get rolling as they did in the studio era."

When World War II broke out, McDowall's father thought it best his family come to America where Mrs.

McDowall had lived as a child. After the first Battle of Britain, McDowall "came out and then, by fluke, within a matter of just a few weeks, by total accident, I won the role in How Green Was My Valley.'" that had an incredible impact." In addition to stage, screen and TV acting, McDowall has enormous affection and regard for radio. "Dramatic radio is such a sensitive thing. All about the color of the voice. A wonderful way of painting with a voice. Orson Welles had an incredible knowledge of the fabric of his volce."

MCDOWALL IS fascinated by that vocal potential and, "I do a, lot of books on tape, which is close to dramatic radio." Recently he recorded "Batman," "Communion" (and its sequel), "Shoes of the Fisherman,"

If anything, visual pleasures and energetic pacing seduce audience attention away from words. Occasional haphazard articulation by players niakes catching every syllable difficult, which adds to the subjugation of language to action.

Hermia as a felsty bundle. She, and Any Kildow as Helena are a comely palt-worthy of the love of Lysander and Demetrius. Tall Lysander. played by Scott Crawford, looks like a young heart-throb with his blond curls, but Scott Berry as Demetrius wears a Three Stooges pageboy that makes him look more like slapstick king than a likely lover, Hermia's daddy may prefer Demetrius as sultor for his daughter, but; if eyes beguile the heart, it's no wonder Demetrius doesn't stand a chance without a bit of fairy dust to help love along Harry Carlson as Hermia's domineering daddy looks and sounds the part of an exasperated parent.

The four lovers play their tangled affections with skill, and in one freefor all scene, they outdo themselves with splendid slapstick antics that fit Puck's observation, "What fools these mortals be."

Lysander tucks Hermia under his arm and carries her around while she flails in fury. Helena puts her hand on Hermia's forehead and holds the angry spitfire at arm's length while Hermia quivers to get at her once-dear friend. Vigorous theater, full of delight.

Designer Susan Barrett deserves double praise for a set that not only captures, the ethercal palette and delicate lighting of the fairies' woodland world but is simple enough to move easily from Oakland University's Varner Theatre to Oakland Community College's Wallace Smith Theatre where the play, will also be presented.

LIGHTS PROJECT mottled leafy designs on elongated banners suspended from the ceiling to create an impressionistic forest as simple as it is effective. Except for a peach light that throbs when Oberon's potions are working their magic, the lighting succeeds through subtlety. That high tech light befits a gimmlcky science fiction set better than the fairy world, but to quibble about a detail so small as a throbbing light is to nitpick a production that is otherwise a visual delight.

Jerry Rathgeb as Bottom strikes a happy balance between being an egotistical jerk and a dear, bumbling man. Rathgeb's Bottom lacks the Flute, Brian Young as Snug, Leah Smith as Snout and Markest Tate play their roles with the broad humor traditional for the rustics.

Tracy Wade makes a fine, lightfooted Puck with an unconventional blue belly-button. The most memorable thing about the fairy king and queen (Andrew John Young and Mary Monroe) are their dramatic, metallic costumes. With his moussed hair and diabolical eyebrows, Oberon brings to mind Jack Nickolson in much younger days.

The fairles (Mary Ray Geb, Yvonne Rosseel, Dawn Hamblin, Kathy J. Williams and Erika Wood) flit about like bothersome little sisters or pesky mosquitoes, hovering around the human lovers tickling and teasing them.

Their antics underscore the playfulness not only of the impish sprites, but of Shakespeare's magical play that makes sport of tangled human affairs, then mercifully unscrambles the confusion to celebrate the impending marriage of the happy couples.

Confusing WLAA hard to figure out

ADMIT IT, I'm confused. Which comes as no surprise, at least not to anyone who's ever met

But it might be surprising (at least I hope it is) to discover that I am confused about something in sports. This is a subject I am, or should be, well-versed in. After all, I get paid for presenting different sides of sports; it is taken for granted I should know what I am writing about (please, no snickers).

But I am not too proud to admit when I am baffled. And I am.

By the Western Lakes Activities Association.

Furthermore, I am not alone. WLAA coaches — the very people who draw up league bylaws for their particular sport — are confused, too.

Can you fully comprehend the delicate intricacles of a hostile takeover in the corporate world? Then chances are you would be better equipped to deciphering the machinations of this league (after absorbing part of the Northwest Suburban League a few years ago, WLAA officials should know how to define hostile takeover).

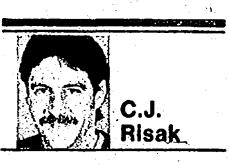

Ever-changing rules make confusion constant. The WLAA's multichampionship rules are prime evidence.

SPRING IS a season of confusion. Who can say if, on any given day, it's going to rain, or snow, or be hot and sunny?

Spring is also the end of the school year, so it's no shock to discover that the WLAA has saved its best translated, that means most confusing - for last.

In every sport sponsored by the 12-team conference; there is some type of season-ending championship, Some sports have tournaments, like basketball; others, like football and soccer, hold one-game championships. And still others, like swimming, are decided in a league meet.

This is true for all sports, except title at 7 p.m. Friday at CEP. The that capacity, it could only help. determined by records against division foes, and an overall WLAA champion, determined by records against all conference rivals. It is entirely possible for a team to finish second, even third, in its division and still win the overall WLAA title. ---

But both sports do follow the league's philosophy. Both have three titles to battle for. As Ron Holland, the athletic director for the three Farmington high schools, explained: "What we're trying to do, what the league philosophy is, is to have two division champions and one overall conference champion, which in most cases is decided by a playoff."

SOUNDS SIMPLE. It isn't.

Preclous lew WLAA sports have similar guidelines for deciding championships, either division or conference. Some combine tournament and dual-meet finishes to figure the conference winner.

In girls soccer, the division winners meet to decide who will be the overall conference champion. This year, Plymouth Canton and Plymouth Salem will battle for the you may recall; went on to the Class A title.

But they never did get the opportunity to play for the WLAA title. Canton had a worse record within the Western Division than Livonia Churchill. So Churchill played Salem for the conference crown, and won.

Seems a format that includes all conference games in deciding the conference championship would be more suitable.

NOT THAT I would support something like the WLAA's baseball-softball formula. That is ludicrious.

Example: It's Tuesday night in the Observer offices, and coaches are calling in game results. The conversation nears an end, and the Observer staff member asks, "So what's your record, coach?"

"Well," the coach answers, hesitantly adding, "we're 6-7 overall, I think. And in the league, we're 5-5."

The staff guy needs clarification. "Is that in the whole conference, or In the division?"

Here's where replies vary from "I dunno" to "The conference, I guess."-More than once, the coach has asked, 'Well, which division are we in?"

As If we know. Or the coach will start backtracking through his schedule, adding wins and losses. "Hey," he'll ques-tion. "Is Northville in our division?"

FACT: IF one baseball or softball coach per night can unhesitatingly, rattle off his overall, conference and division records, it's a miracle.

What adds to the confusion is, if teams play a double-header, the second game doesn't count in the standings. I think.

There is a solution for this. Although the conference isn't big when compared to Detroit's PSL or Catholic League, it would still be benefit by having one person serve as league commissioner. Even if a certain school's athletic director were voted in for a two-year term to serve in location. Offers available at participating locations in Birmingham, Southfield, Warren, Ann Arbor and Detroit Metro Airport. For reservations, call: 355-7900.

Babits brothers vault into limelight

By Steve Kowalski staff writer

2D(L.R.G.W)

Paul and Bob Bablts, America's most successful pole-yaulting brothers, know that clearing the bar is just one of the obstacles they face at track meets.

The Babits' travel the world to compete, but their first concern is getting around without leaving their . pole — 'a vaulter's most treasured possession - at the airport. Making sure of that can be as difficult as clearing 19 feet.

Ever see a guy (in a suit and tie, no less) lug a 17-foot pole through an airport? How about two?

We have all sorts of trouble exporting those around," said Paul, a 1979 Redford Union graduate. "I was in New York once, and the fiveminute taxi ride from the hotel to the airport cost $13 - plus the cabble wanted a tip for strapping the pole to the side of his car. I gave him $50 and he started yelling and wouldn't let me go because he wanted more,

"I couldn't believe it. It's a pain in the neck. My dad said we should have been distance runners."

CORRECTION.

Robert Babits Sr. probably used to say that.

Paul, 28, and Bob Jr., 29, are just the second pair of brothers in the history of track and field to have cleared at least 18 feet. The other two are the Soviet Union's Sergy and Vaseley Bubka, both of whom have cleared 19 feet.

Paul's leap of 17 feet, 4 inches Saturday gave him the title at the Jesse Owens Invitational in Columbus, Ohio. Bob did not jump competitively from 1983 until 1986, but is making a fine comeback, placing third at Saturday's meet, at 16-6.

The Babits', who live in the Ann Arbor area, belong to the Chicago Track Club.

"I've got the time right now, and I still like it," said Bob, a '77 RU graduate. "We're just reaching our prime. A lot of the best jumpers in the country are in their late 20s, early 30s. You probably don't start losing speed until 32 or 33 - that's the . end of a pole vaulting career."

There are rumors that the Babits' will be matched against the Bubka's in a brothers only meet, and Paul's agent, John Nubani, is serious about it. Nubani also represents Roger Kingdom, a gold medallst in the high hurdles at the Seoul Olympics.

"THERE'S BEEN talk about it," Paul said. "If we can get our jumps up to 18-8, we have a chance. When we get the right conditions, both of us can clear 18-8."

Paul's best outdoors leap came last year, when he cleared 18 1/2 at the Tampa (Fla.) Gatorade Meet. He cleared 18-2 indoors last December at the Eastern Michigan University Holiday Invitational. Bob vaulted 18-1/2 March 12 at the Midwest Regional in Columbus, Ohio, for his person-- al best.

Both have their sights set on making the 1992 U.S. Olympic team, and that would call for continued progress. Paul has outleaped 1998 Olympic team member Billy Offon once and Earl Bell, another Olympian, twice, in winning two invitationals this season.

The nationals are June 15-17 in Houston, Texas.

"The Olympics are my goal," said Paul, who leaped for three years at Murray State (Ky.), and one at San Jose State (Calif.) after high school. "I want to jump 18-4 this year and 18-8 next year. I want to progress in four-inch increments every year and by '92 that would mean I'd be jumping 19-2 - 18-8 went to the Olympics in '88. I'd be right on schedule."

THE COMPETITION between the Babits doesn't end with pole vaulting. They also compete as brokers in the computer world, but it's a friendly rivalry.

"It's friendly — as long as he doesn't beat me," says Paul.

Bob remembers more than one meet when the public address announcer kept calling him "Paul."

"I've jumped in some meets where they announced me as being Paul the whole time," Bob said. "It's good for us. It's gotten us entered in some events - having us both jump over 18 feet. But you wouldn't know we were brothers by the way we jumped. We look alike, but I wear glasses and he doesn't.

"He's got a slow style with higher grips (on the pole). He's more controlled. My jump is quicker, with a lower grip, but the result is usually the same.'

Pole vaulters Paul (second from left) and Bob Babits (far right) have traveled all across the country and made friends amongst their fellow track competitors. The Redford Union High products have each cleared 18 feet.

Chiefs win title outright

By Brad Emons staff writer

With nearly 82 percent of the Western Lakes Activities Association boys tennis tournament in, Tuesday's returns clearly showed that Plymouth Canton is again the winner.

The Chiefs proved that their unbeaten dualmeet season was not a fluke, capturing the title with a team-high 20 points, outlasting host Livonia Stevenson (17) and Plymouth Salem (16). Northville was fourth.

Five of the seven flight champions were determined on Tuesday, but championships were scheduled for late Wednesday at No. 2 singles and No. 2 doubles. The two late matches, however, had no bearing on the final team standings.

Canton coach Jim Hayes knew going in that winning the WLAA would not be easy.

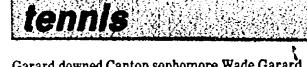

"I said it would be close and we were just hoping to be in the top three," he said. "If the breaks went our way, we would win."

The Chiefs made their own breaks and got some help from the host Spartans to repeat as champions.

BUT FOR AWHILE it appeared Salem was on the verge of winning the crown.

Going into the five finals, Canton held a threepoint edge over the neighboring Rocks, 18-15.

With each school participating in four of the five finals, the outcome was still in doubt, particularly when four of the five matches were forced Garard downed Canton sophomore Wade Garard, 6-3, 6-2, in the battle of top seeds.

Shortly after, the No. 4 singles crown was determined as Chris Harper held off Salem's Chris Marschak in another battle of top seeds, 4-6, 7-5, 6-3.

Harper, who is unbeaten heading into Friday's state regionals, paid the price for victory.

He cramped up several times during the match and walked off with his knees and hands scraped up and bloodied.

"Our guys work hard and never give up," Hayes said. "I told my guys there are only two days in the year where you have to be fit and that's the league and the regional meets."

Fittingly, the final match of the day featured the tourney's top two players, Stevenson's Roland Wolff, the Hungarian exchange student, against Canton's feisty Jim Gallagher at No. 1 singles.

WOLFF, whose only loss all season was to Southfield-Lathrup's Brett Dreznick in a nonleague match, was the overwhelming favorite against Gallagher, having beaten the Canton netter twice in straight-sets during the regular GALLAGHER'S GRITTY effort was somewhat overshadowed by the contributions from the Chiefs' No. 2 doubles team of Jeff Binder and Scott Jones.

The Canton unseeded pair pulled off a mild surprise in the quarterfinals, knocking off Salem's No. 2 seeded team of Jeff Rearick and Mike Sell, 6-4, 0-6, 6-4.

"They won a three-setter after Salem had the bye," said Hayes. "That match was a two-point swing. Jones and Binder had a pretty good tourney.'

Meanwhile, the No. 2 doubles flight was filled with upsets.

In the other half of the draw, North Farmington's Brian Rottinghaus and Todd Stoneman earned a spot in the finals by surprising Stevenson's top-seeded pair of Bob Dimitriou and Matt Downer, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4.

Meanwhile, Northville's unseeded duo of Todd Booth and Mike Mathes also reached the final by eliminating Jones and Binder, 7-5, 6-0.

The upsets kept coming at No. 2 singles when unseeded Matt Daniel of Livonia Churchill knocked off No. 2 seed Dan Orlandi in the semifinals, 6-2, 6-2.

Daniel was not seeded because of a broken finger, which kept him out most of the regular season. (He began playing again last week.)

ON THE OTHER side of the draw, North's Tim McMinn, the top seed, cruised to a 6-3, 6-0 semifinal triumph over Salem's Ryan Bannan.

Measles outbreak may put Cougars on fence

Kathy Dusek and Francis Borg scored two goals aplece Tuesday to lead Garden City to a 4-1 girls soccer victory in what possibly could be the Cougars' final match of the season.

A school outbreak of the measles left only 11 GC players available for action.

Due to an imposed guarantine period for students who have not had measles shots, Garden City is in danger of forfeiting its final regular season match today against Dearborn and Monday's Class A district opener, also against Dearborn. Test results revealed today by the Wayne County Health Department will determine the availability of some of the GC players.

Kendall Janik, Renee Nott and Borg each chipped in with an assist in the Cougar victory.

Sharon Raab tallied the Redford Union goal.

Garden City upped its record to 8-5-1 overall with the win.

Cougar coach Amy Weber believes the season is over, but is hopeful about next season.

"We would have given some people a hard time (in the districts), I guarantee it," she said. "But we may have to wait until next year."

On Monday, Garden City dominated Redford Thurston, defeating the Eagles 5-0.

The most dominant Cougar was right winger Borg, who poured in four goals to lead the offensive attack.

soccer

Janik added the final Cougar goal, while Dusek (three assists) and Lila Trombley (two assists) took care of the playmaking.

Goalie Tisha Guido got the shutout for Garden City.

FRANKLIN 3, HARRISON 0: Patty Shea scored two first-half goals to lead Livonia Frankllin to a win Monday over visiting Farmington Harrison.

Jenny Whitfield added the other Franklin goal, while Sarah Bauer chipped in with an assist.

Goalles Erica Sundeck and Jodi Horner combined on the shutout for the Patriots. The win improved Franklin's record to 1-2-1 in the Western Division of the Western Lakes Activities Association and 5-5-2 overall.

STEVENSON 11, WALLED LAKE CENTRAL 0: The visiting Spartans scored eight first-half goals Monday on their way to a thrashing of the Vikings.

Karen Carney tallied the hat trick to lead the Stevenson onslaught.

Stevenson's record is now 8-3-2. On Saturday, Stevenson and Birmingham Marian battled to a scoreless tie.

The visiting Spartans had their chances, as they hit the goalpost three times and also failed to convert on a breakway.

to a third set.

But Canton gained a share of the crown when Stevenson's Jeff Wiegel and the big serving Alan Paterson rallied to hand Salem's top-seeded duo at No. 1 doubles, Scott Hobbs and Matt Lore, a 3-6, 6-2, 6-4 defeat.

The outcome was sealed when Canton's No. 3 doubles team of Brad Flowers and Jeff Hines, the top seeds, won a tense three-setter, 6-4, 4-6, 7-6 against the second seeds, Jeff Elliott and K.C. Kirkpatrick. (It was 7-4 in the tiebreaker.)

"That was a scratch and claw match all the way," Hayes said. "They (Flowers and Hines) are the ones who gave us the (dual-meet) match 4-3 against Salem earlier this season."

THE NO. 3 doubles final was preceeded by the No. 3 singles championship where Salem's Wade season.

The Budapest native won the first set handily, 6-2, but the scrappy Gallagher pulled even after winning the second set, 6-3.

Gallagher changed his tactics somewhat for the rematch, hoping to catch the 6-foot-4 Wolff olf-guard, mixing his top-spin ground strokes with a series of lobs and drop shots.

"We talked about Jimmy keeping the ball short and then sneaking in," said the Canton coach.

The strategy worked for the most part, but Gallagher began feeling the effects of a long day on the court (his third match of the day) when he started cramping up as well. That was all Wolff needed as he regrouped to win the decisive third set, 6-3.

With both No. 2 singles and doubles yet to be determined, the only thing still undecided was who get second and third overall in the team standings.

With the final WLAA standings based 50-50 on overall dual-meet record along with final place in the league meet, second and third was still up for grabs between Stevenson and Salem.

Each team still had to make up one dual meet match today - Stevenson taking on Churchill and Salem against Walled Lake Central. Those matches indicate that Stevenson will get second overall and Salem third. Complete results, including the other 28 per-

Churchill sent the game into estra innings, scoring three times in the top of the sixth inning and won the game with a four-run burst in the top of the eighth. If might take Harrison coach John Herrington three days to forget this heart-breaking loss.

The Chargers clubbed three two-run homers in the game, getting a blast Friday from Jim Stoitsiadis and one by Jason Gabel in the sixth.

Gabel, Stoitsladis, Melster and Scott Kenney had two hits each for Churchill.

FRANKLIN 10-8, N. FARMINGTON 2-9: Joe Ransley had four hits, including a first-inning grand slam Monday, leading host Livonia Franklin to a 10-2 lirst-game win over North Farmington.

So coach Gerry Cullen rewarded Ransley by resting him in Game No. 2.

But Franklin probably could have used Ransley's hot bat, Franklin, 5-10 overall, scored four runs in its last at-bat of the second game, but the Patriots were unable to push across the twing and winning runs. Days Paralla days at the patriots were unable to push across tying and winning runs. Dave Roman's double highlighted the seventh-Inning rally. Self Graham suffered the loss in Game 2, leaving after 5% Ransley's grand slam, which raised his season average to (0, was the big blow in Game No. 1, but Graham also starred, collecting two hits and two RBI. and Dennis earned the win, allowing four hits and striking out four.

REDFORD CC 3-1, DeLaSALLE 1-11: Redford Catholic Central finished the Catholic League Central Division portion of its schedule Saturday, splitting a double-header against league champion Warren De La Salle.

The Catholic' League playoffs begin Saturday, and CC won't be a part of it because the Shamrocks tied for third with Harper Woods Noire Dame at 11-9, 18-9 overall.

Leo Hutchinson continued his torrid pitching in the 3-1 opening-game win against De la Salle, striking out 13 batters and allowing just four hits in seven innings.

Tom Hill was 2-for-4 and scored one run for CC in Game 1. Hutchinson had a triple and a single and one BBI. Kevin Wheeler had two hits in two trips.

DeLaSalle wouldn't allow Mark Staniforth to° survive the first inning of the second game, clobbering CC, 11-1 in a fiveinning mercy-rule win. Staniforth faced four batters without getting an out and gave way to Tom Hill.

Joel Mussat finished up for CC, pitching the last 2% innings.

ST. AGATHA'5, ST. ALPHONSUS 4: Rick Fowler pitched 235 innings of shutout relief Monday as Redford St. Agatha held off Dearborn St. Alphonsus, 5-4 at Ford Field.

The state-ranked Aggies raised their overall mark to 16-6. Fowler entered the game with the Aggles trailing, 4-3, and the bases loaded in the fifth. He struck out two and walked four.

Fowler also helped St. Agatha's at the plate, rapping two hits and scoring twice. Marc Salah also collected two hits -atriple and a double -- and drove in four runs. Salah's double in the seventh drove in the winning run.

Jamiil Martin, who improved to 2-1 in the opener, went the whole way and survived an 11-hit attack by Rice. Bob Fekete also went the distance in suffering the loss for the Warriors.

Borgess sent the game into extra innings by scoring five runs in its last at-bat to tie the game 6-6. Rice scored twice in the top of the eighth, but Martin kept the Spartans hopes alive with a two-run homer in the bottom of the inning. He finished 3-for-4 with two RBI.

Kerry Mitchell had four hits and two RBI, including a solo homer, to power Rice to the rout in Game 2.

Tom Cole, who was pulled after five innings, suffered the loss. Charles North had both Borgess hits.'

CANTON 2-10, JOHN GLENN 1-15: Brian Paupore outdueled Westland John Glenn's Bobby Lawrence Tuesday, as host Plymouth Canton defeated Westland John Glenn 2-1 in the opening game of a double-header.

Glenn came back to win the second game, 15-10, but coach Norm Hoenes would rather have won Game No. 1 - the one that counts in the WLAA overall race.

The split leaves Glenn at 14-4 overall, 12-4 in the WLAA. Lawrence evened his mark at 2-2, giving up just four hits, but Paupore was even better, striking out 10 and allowing four hits.

"I was real pleased with the way Bobby Lawrence pitched," Hoenes said. "We haven't been getting it, but this was the best performance for him. But it was also our lowest bat production of the year. The bats were a little gulet. But that's because of their left hander (Paupore). I was impressed with him." Derek Humphries' RBI single in the bottom of the fifth gave Canton a 2-1 lead. Mike Culver's RBI double in the third gave the Chiefs the game's first lead before Glenn managed to tie it in the top of the fifth on two walks and a Canton error. Glenn led the nightcap 12-2 at one point as Mike Lamp cruised to his third win against no defeats. Canton scored six runs in the fifth to keep things respectable. Scott Kennedy, Canton's starter, was the losing pitcher.

Area teachers honored for recycling programs

Four area teachers are among those honored for promoting solid waste eduction in Wayne County.

They are Roz Modety, Kettering Elementary, Westland; Dane Nichols and Carol Breed, Bird Elementary, Plymouth; and Ilene Hemingway, Farrand Elementary, Plymouth

In conjunction with Michigan Recycling Week, Wayne County Public Works officials' presented recognition awards to 23 teachers for their active involvement in promoting solid waste education.

Wayne County is running out of space to put garbage and must look for alternatives.

It is estimated that 3 million tons of solid waste will be generated this year. That amount represents one fourth of the total 12 million tons generated for the entire state of Michigan.

Officials sought to honor the teachers because awareness of the problem is the first step to a solution and education is the key to change attitudes and behavior.

After undergoing a training program, the teachers are now helping their students recognize the role recycling plays in addressing both the solid waste and energy issues in Wayne County and Michigan.

An awards presentation was held last Thursday in the Wayne County Intermediate School District in Wayne.

The 23 teachers were selected from schools throughout Detroit and the county to take part in a training course called Recycle Wayne County. The program is funded jointly by grants through the Wayne County Department of Public Services and Wayne County Intermediate School District.

Jack-in-the pulpit is easy to spot

Admid the profusion of spring wildflowers, the jack-in-the-pulpit is one of the most frequently recognized. Its unique shape makes it easy to remember and identify.

Jack-in-the-pulpit's name was derived from it's unusual shape. It reminded the early botanists of a preacher standing in his pulpit while delivering a sermon. Enclosing a spike-like spadix (jack, or the preacher) is a striped cup-shaped structure with a pointed flap that covers the top. This enclosure reminded people of the pulpit.

AT THE base of the spike, or jack, inside the spathe is where the actual flowers are located. Like its close relative the skunk cabbage, the flowers are hidden inside an enclosure.

In order to see the flowers one must gently separate the overlapping flaps of the spathe and look near the bottom. If the flowers look like threads, they are the male flowers which are probably shedding light colored pollen. Female flowers, on the other hand, look like small green berries.

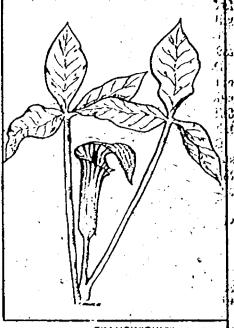

When you do look inside, you may find some small fungus flies. They are lurred to the flower by an ordor that resembles a fungus which the flies would normally lay their eggs on. While the flies are searching for their fungus, they are collecting pollen, or transferring pollen to a female plant.

THE STALK which supports the flower emerges from the base of the plant where the leaf stalks also emerge. At the end of each leaf stalk is a compound leaf with three large rounded leaflets. A female flower will often be large and have two leaf stalks with three leaflets at the end of each stalk, while a male will have only one leaf stalk and three leaflets. Most spring woodland wildflowers emerge and blossom before the trees leaf out completely. Early emergence insures that they will have enough sunlight to produce energy. Though the flowers may wither away by late spring, the leaves will persist and enlarge so they are better able to use what little sunlight-reaches the forest floor.

A walk through the same area in fall may reveal large clusters of scarlet berries on a single stalk. These are the fruits of the jack-inthe-pulpit, which are often eaten by birds.

From Birmingham, where Elmore Leonard pens those hot-selling suspense thrillers, to Mancelona, where Gloria Whelan crafts her prize-winning short storles, to the campus at East Lansing, where Diane Wakoski puts together her artful poetry, to a secluded spot near Lake Leelanau, where Jim Harrison creates his gritty, no-holds-barred prose - in Michigan, there's a whole lot of writing going on.

And it's not just name writers like Leonard and Whelan and Wakoski and Harrison who are involved. Listen, and you'll hear the sounds of scribbling pencils and clacking typewriters, as hundreds in this pleasant peninsula apply themselves to the serious business of putting words to paper.

Fortunately, many Michlgan writers have been recognized for their efforts recently, and awarded prizes for their well-crafted prose and poetry. The following is a partial listing of those writers. While some names are familiar, most are not. Congratulations to all.

All three poets read from their work at this year's 13th annual Michigan Michigan Poetry Festival, held at the St. Regis Hotel in Detroit on May 5 and 6.

Beth Long of Farmington took home the second place award, and Robert Friar of Livonia, third prize. Judges for the contest were author Thomas Sullivan; author William Kienzle; former editor Javan Kienzle; and Free Press book editor Linnea Lannon. Winners received cash prizes.

Zipper Closing the gap for young readers

By Victoria Diaz special writer

AN YOU make an amazing Moebius strip? Do you know that your car can fly? Did you know that it is against the law to sing out of tune in North Carolina, and to grow dandelions in Washington, D.C.? Are you aware that Abner Doubleday invented baseball when he was only 16?

If you read Zipper, you'll know all of the above, plus a lot more. Zipper is a new newspaper especially for children — although it's reported that parents like to read it, too.

The publisher is Diane Lewis of Livonia, mother of three, who also edits, writes, creates the original illustrations, typesets and does all layout on the fledgling periodical. In addition, she's the marketing and distribution department.

While she does have some experience in marketing and typesetting because of part-time work in the family's manufacturing business, she doesn't have a smidgen of newspapering in her background.

She is simply a concerned parent with a strong creative streak who saw a real need for something like Zipper in the marketplace, and has set out to do something about that need.

their vocabulary words in the stories and they thought it was great. They'd get so excited about it, and would read those little books a thousand times and, consequently, learn their vocabulary words.

"So, finally one day I just sat down and started putting my stories together and I started really looking at things, seeing what my kids especially liked," she said.

"I TALKED A lot with teachers," she said, "and I began hearing the same things over and over again from them - that there was this 'gap' that existed. There were no educational tools that really to kids in the 8-12 age range in 1989. Although there are lots of things out there for very young children, when you get the 8-12 group, something happens.

"I also looked around some at what was on the market which, generally, just seemed 'fluffy' to me," she said. "We took Children's Highlights for the boys and, when they'd get it, they'd do that 'What's Wrong with this Picture?' section, and that would be the end of that."

Eventually, Lewis said she decided to stop talking about it, and to "just do something."

Almost before she knew it, she

SHORTLY AFTER that first issue - printed at Newsprinting Inc. in Northville - appeared in March, Lewis found out her work had just begun. Zipper had to have some readers, of course, and ries by almost 800 authors were entered in this year's prestigious PEN Syndicated Fiction Project contest.

THE GOOD reaction included a highly encouraging letter from first lady Barbara Bush, received after Lewis sent her several copies of the just-out Zipper.

When authors Alan Cheuse and Laura Furman, and Simon and Schuster editor Leslie Wells, had completed the final judging, Michigan writers Charles Baxter and Nicholas Delbanco of Ann Arbor, Stuart Dybek of Kalamazoo and Janet Kauffman of Hudson were among the 55 winners from the United States and Canada.

Winning authors receive an initial $500 for the right to circulate their work to participating newspaper markets, and to make an audio tape of their story for broadcasting on National Public Radio, as well as additional payment each time the story is published or broadcast.

• Winners of the 1989 University of Michigan Hopwood Awards for excellence in writing included Gregory Loselle of Wyandotte. Loselle won both a major drama/screenplay and poetry award, and also received the highest award - $2,000 in the major drama/screenplay category.

Other Michigan winners were Daniel Plice of Ann Arbor (major drama/screenplay); Brett Stevenson,

• Also in Livonia, Phillip Sterling of Big Rapids has won the $100 first prize in the 1989 Poet Hunt contest, conducted through Schoolcraft College. Second and third place winners respectively were Jan Mordenski of Dearborn Heights and Ed Hoeppner of Rochester Hills.

Contest judge and noted Michigan poet Herb Scott called the judging of this year's contest "very difficult." Of approximately 800 poems submitted, "at least 100 were of winning caliber," he said.

• In the junior division: fifth grader John Webster, seventh grader Jennifer Lee Peterson and ninth grader Eustaquio Pacot Jr. shared top honors in the second annual Westland Cultural Society Student Writing Contest.

"MY HUSBAND and I read a lot, and as we watched kids (read), we came up with this theory," Lewis said.

"For kids who are not great readers, books are really struggles. We thought that, if a kid had something that was more 'bitesized,' they could enjoy and learn, too. It would build up their reading skills, and sort of get them going."

But there just didn't appear to be anything on the newsstands or in the bookstores that really filled that bill, she felt, especially in the 8-12 age group.

SOMETIMES, SHE put together "bite-sized" books for her sons, to help them with school assignments.

"When my two youngest would bring their vocabulary words (assignment) home, I'd write these little stories and illustrate them, and run them off on the Xerox machine. I'd use their names and found herself in the midst of creating the first issue of Zipper.

"We were looking for words" that were fun when you say them, and 'zipper' seemed like one of those words. When you say it, it's funny."

THE 20-PAGE first issue from conception to printer took her approximately three months to complete.

Most of the work was done at home, with husband Craig serving as sounding board for Lewis' ideas and sons Matthew, 12, Chad, 10, and Ryan, 8, contributing ideas and suggestions along the way.

"The boys contributed quite a bit themselves, both directly and indirectly," Lewis said.

"All of us would sit around get on a kind of brainstorming thing for ideas. One night, I just said, 'Did you ever wonder what it was like before Newton discovered gravity?' As stupid as that is, somehow, when you sit and talk about what you said, it opens them up, gets them thinking. I've relied on them a lot."

soon she was out on the streets trying to find those readers.

"Once we'd published an issue, I started going out with It, seeing what kind of reaction I'd get," she sald.

"I think our timing was good. Michigan had just changed all their reading programs in the schools - no one was saying you could only read books on a certain reading list. They were telling kids to just read, whether it was a comic book or a cereal box or whatever it was.

"Also, Barbara Bush had just come out with the literacy campaign, so I think people tended to be just a little more receptive to something geared in that direction.

"We just went around to schools, libraries, parents, saying 'Take a look at this. Give one to your child.' I left some off at doctors' and dentists' offices, in the walting rooms.

"Educators and parents and some of the people who are in charge of the reading program in the state were all very suppor-

"As for my own kids' reaction, when we got the first copies home - they fought over it," Lewis said. "Believe me, it's the first thing in a long time that I've done that my kids just went nuts over."

Feedback from other young readers along the line has also. been greatly encouraging. Included in the first issue was a kind of spelling competition, for which readers were asked to mail in their answers.

THAT HAS already drawn great response, Lewis sald. Curiosity is also apparently high about one of the main features, a kind of ghost story entitled "The Mystery of the Hollow Key," which concludes with the second issue.

"I have so many kids coming up to me and asking me to tell them what finally happens in 'The Mystery of the Hollow Key," Lewis said. "It's really wonderful.

T SURE helps to have an architect in the family when you're breaking new ground in housing styles.

Patricia Moore, principal of a middle school in Plymouth, wanted a home that would provide peace and tranquility, with little maintenance. She teamed up with her son Brad, an architect, to develop a project that resembles condominium living, with more privacy.

The project, called LairdHaven, is an upscale community of nine "cluster homes" in Northville Township. Cluster housing is single family homes attached in such a way that there are no common living walls between units.

"They are attached through a garage wall or garden gate, so there is no noise," said Moore, 55, principal of Central Middle School. "None of the units look onto another person's unit. There is common ownership of the grounds, and common maintenance, just like a condominium."

The icing on the cake? The setting is woodsy, and there's a golf course within shouting distance.

LAIRDHAVEN, LOCATED off Six Mile Road between Sheldon and Northville roads, adjoins wooded The four-acre project backs up to the Brooklane golf course, and a small stream flows nearby.

"This is just exactly what I wanted," Moore said of LairdHaven, which was designed by her son, J. Bradley "Brad" Moore. It is the first project developed under Northville Township's cluster housing zoning option enacted several years ago.

LairdHaven units range in size from approximately 2,200 square feet to around 2,400 square feet. Three separate floor plans offer such amenities as spacious master suite, great room with cathedral cellings, decks, formal dining room and kitchen features to satisfy the most exacting cook.

ALL UNITS HAVE a brick and fieldstone exterior, two-car garage with electric door openers and other safety and energy-officiency-features. Other extras not often found in many condominium-style projects are a breakfast nook and cozy little corners just perfect for quiet reading.

Prices start at $275,000.

and condominiums.

"It's mother's return on six years of (his) college," Patricia Moore said, laughing. "I wouldn't take a step without Brad."

Moore also received a lot of encouragement from Patricia Hann, a Plymouth hairdresser and community activist who recently, developed. several condominium projects in Northville and Plymouth. Like Moore, Hann became a developer because of her own housing needs.

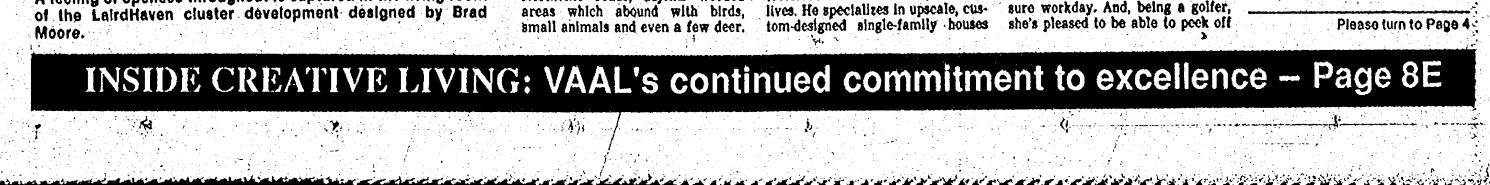

Many of LairdHaven's features reflect Patricia Moore's yearning for a tranquil place where she could unwind at the end of her high-pressure workday. And, being a golfer, her balcony and see the lush green fairways of the nearby golf course.

"I wanted to drive not far from where I work to find a haven," Moore said. "I also wanted the quality to be a notch above what I had seen."

When Moore was selecting a name for the project, she turned to ber Scottish roots. Laird, in Scottish, means lord, or owner of the manor. "It's a safe haven for the master of: his own castle," she said.

ATTAINING HER dream home hasn't exactly been a breeze for Moore, She spotted the property;

'Zipper' verbally is closing the gap

They're asking for more. So I think we're doing something right.'

The second issue of Zipper, which is expected to be hot off the presses any day now, was put together in approximately 10 days, Lewis said.

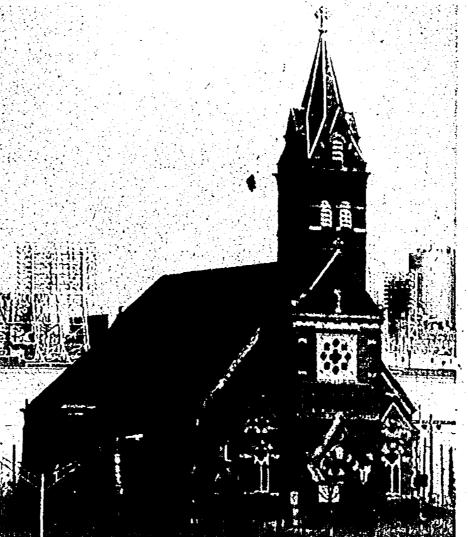

LEWIS HAS a lot of material "backed up," and is also receiving submissions from other writers, along with resources and ideas from educators who now know about the paper.

Lewis intends to make Zipper available at Borders book store in Noyi in the near future and is also planning a classroom edition for this fall, which will be available to teachers and students at a special group rate.

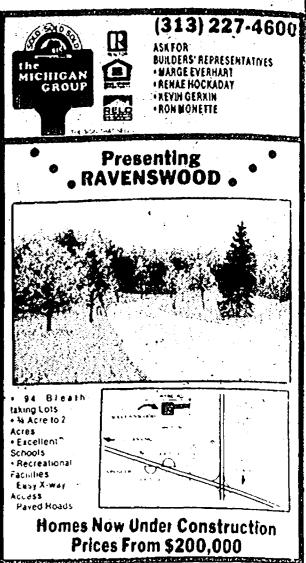

She'd also like eventually to place the paper in supermarkets and drugstores, although, for now, the Zipper budget doesn't allow for that relatively expensive venture, she said.

One-year subscriptions are $19.95, or 75 cents per copy. Write to Zipper, 17387 Francavilla. Livonia 48152, or call 261-2409

Gresser wins top VAAL show honors

Harbinger-of-spring is a small plant having white flowers signaling the start of a glorious season of color and good things to come.

In local art circles, a similar harbinger perhaps is the spring exhibit by the Visual Art Association of Livonia - probably better known by its acronym of VAAL. The arts group's annual spring show/sale opens Tuesday, May 23, in the lobby of the Livonia City Hall and continues through Friday, June 9.

Winners of the juried show will be honored at public reception to be held from 2-4 p.m. Sunday, May-28. Presentation of awards will be made by Dan Kachanowski, president of the Livonia Arts Commission.

And as in years past, this year's juror Andrey DiMarco herself a past winner of the show - had an outstanding field of art work from which to select winners in the various categories. The number of entries was also slightly up over previous years.

BEST OF SHOW honors went to Livonia artist Judith Gresser, for a watercolor, "Mask." Of the painting, DiMarco said, "The color composition and excitement of color are just "Baskets," an oil by Dearborn Heights artist Irene Kallas, was selected for top honors in the oils category. "I think the color combination is the nicest part of the painting. Everything works," DiMarco commented.

In the watercolor division, Livonia artist Eileen Bibby took first place with "Flags - St. Augustine." Of the "strong painting," DiMarco said, "I think the structural area is what I liked best; countered with flag poles shooting up with the porch railing."

Bibby, incidentally, will be featured in a one-woman show in Detroit's Scarab Club opening Saturday, June 3 and continuing for a month.

First in the combined categories was Ellen Kallick of Lathrup Village with a pastel, "Salem Lights." Kallick was successful in capturing strong emotion, DiMarco commented.

"When you paint a person, it doesn't matter how realistic or abstract, when you capture the emotion, you have a painting. In this particular piece, there is fire and emotion," DiMarco sald.

Other winners are - oil: Marge Stock, second and Ann Niparko, third; watercolor and mixed media: Ronda Harrison
