Judge questions Bennett tape

BY DARRELL CLEM
STAFF WRITER

A Westland judge is questioning the legality of a tape-recorded phone conversation between a John Glenn High School girls basketball player and former coach Patrick Bennett, who marks one month in jail Tuesday for a highly public sex scandal.

District Judge C. Charles Bokos said he is troubled by testimony from the 16-year-old girl that she didn't know authorities were taping a March 6 phone call that she made to Bennett, 33, from the Wayne Police Department.

The girl, 16 at the time, said during a preliminary hearing Thursday that she wasn't asked to consent to the taping, which Bennett's attorney has labeled "a set up" and an invasion of privacy.

The teen's testimony contradicted statements by her mother and by prosecuting attorney Margaret Rynler, who insisted Thursday that the issue was discussed March 6 in Rynler's office before the call was made later that day.

"She knew," the mother testified about her daughter. "She understood that. She agreed to it readily."

Rynler has submitted the tape and a transcript of the conversation as evidence to support allegations against Bennett, who is charged with third-degree criminal sexual conduct and obstructing justice. The latter charge stems from allegations that Bennett told the girl not to cooperate with authorities.

Bennett, a 10-year girls basketball coach, was arrested at the Farmington Hills Kroger store where he

Victim stumbled into illegal gun sale

BY DARRELL CLEM

Murder defendant Keith Lamont Burns admitted that a Canton Township woman was slain when she stumbled upon an illegal gun sale at a Westland apartment complex where she worked, but he claims he didn't kill her, a police sergeant testified Thursday.

Burns, in a statement to police, said he was selling a 9mm gun to another man at Hunters West apartments when maintenance worker Boonahoun Andrew, 50, was strangled and pistol-whipped on the head, Westland police Sgt. Tom Kubitskey said in court.

But police have rejected Burns' claim that Andrew was killed by the second man, who isn't a murder suspect, Kubitskey said during a preliminary examination before 18th District Judge Gail McKnight. The hearing ended with Burns, 27, being ordered to stand trial on first-degree murder and felony firearms charges.

He would face life in prison without parole if convicted as charged.

Andrew, described by relatives as a caring woman who took vegetables to senior citizen residents at Hunters West, was found lying face down about 9:15 a.m. March 29 in a blood-spattered hallway near a first-floor indoor swimming pool, police said.

Residents saw a suspect matching Burns' description fleeing the scene, and he was captured a half-hour later when police chased and captured him in a neighborhood near the high-rise complex, located a half-mile south of

'Loan closet' open for accident victims

BY DARRELL CLEM

Medical expenses can be devastating for victims injured in car accidents, fires and other mishaps, particularly if insurance coverage is lacking. Families can also be put in a financial crunch if they have to buy wheelchairs, crutches or walkers.

To help residents get the medical equipment they need on a temporary basis, Westland firefighters for 29 years have operated a "loan closet" that's free of charge to people in need. Even before that, volunteer firefighters extended a hand when the city was known as Nankin Township.

But the loan closet itself occasionally needs help to buy equipment, and that's where the city's more fortunate residents come in. Donations of money or medical equipment, including "anything that would help somebody become mobile," can be given at any time, said Sgt. Michael Muscat, who coordinates the project.

The loan closet is located at Westland Fire Station No. 3, 1850 Northgate, Westland, 48185. Donations and medical equipment also can be dropped off at the station, at Northgate and Palmer between Merriam and Venoy.

The non-emergency phone number is 721-2003.

Workers praised

Two Wayne-Westland school district maintenance workers were honored during last week's school board meeting for averting a possible boiler explosion at Wayne Memorial High School last month. Workers Ken Dahn and Ron Beck risked their lives to fix a boiler that Superintendent Larry Thomas said was "out of control." The incident occurred during after-school hours. School board member Laurel Raisanen told Dahn and Beck that "you didn't think of yourself, you just thought of the school and what you had to do."

Town Meeting

U.S. Rep. Lynn Rivers, D-Ann Arbor, will host a public town meeting Tuesday night, April 25, to answer questions about the first 100 days of the new congressional session. Rivers, whose district includes Westland, will sponsor the informational session in the Westland Center auditorium, on the mall's lower level. Rivers, in her first term, said that she expects to talk about tax-related issues, entitlements, Social Security and other things affecting senior citizens. The program, to be held from 7-9 p.m., is designed to give residents a chance to "air their views and concerns as well as to become better informed about what is taking place in Washington," a spokesman said.

Take note

Wayne-Westland school district secretaries were commended last week as the school board declared April 28 as Secretaries Day throughout the district. Superintendent Larry Thomas said secretaries often act as mother, nurse and phone receptionist, among other duties that keep a school running. On a lighthearted note, board member Richard LeBlanc said secretaries "make us look good, and often they're not given much to work with."

Optometrist returns

Dr. Dennis Kennedy, an optometrist with a practice in Westland, recently returned from the Virgin Islands where he was a featured speaker at a meeting of other optometrists from throughout North America and Europe. Kennedy discussed the latest developments of laser surgery for the correction of nearsightedness.

Art gets festive

The Livonia school district's Fine Arts Festival is in full swing and will continue through the end of the month.

The festival, which features works by Westland students in the district, will run through Wednesday, April 26, in the Livonia Civic Center Library, on Five Mile east of Farmington Road.

The 19th annual festival, organized by district elementary and secondary art teachers, showcases some of the finest art created by students.

The exhibit is open during regular library hours.

Marshmallow bombs bombard Easter kids

Hundreds of area children and their parents turned out Friday for the Wayne County Park System's 10th annual "Great Marshmallow Drop" at Nankin Mills in Hines Park.

About 20,000 marshmallows were released from a hovering helicopter, although many of them blew out of the intended drop area.

The idea is that youngsters scramble around to collect marshmallows, which may be exchanged for prize-filled eggs.

A second drop occurred the same day at Elizabeth Park in Trenton.

The parks system's next big kids event is "Mud Day" 11 a.m. Tuesday, July 11, in the Nankin Mills picnic area.

Children will be invited to run around in a sea of mud created by 200 tons of topsoil and 20,000 gallons of water.

The dirtiest kids will be dubbed "Mr. & Mrs. Mud."

Whatcha got there? Frank Sullivan of Westland congratulates grandson Tyra Kemp, who grabbed one of 20,000 marshmallows released from a helicopter.

University presidents lobby for more state money

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Students can forget about getting a 1996 income tax credit on the tuitions they pay to Michigan public universities, a key legislator says.

That tax break — about $250 a year — would go to students at universities which hold 1995-1996 tuition increases below the rate of consumer price inflation, about 3 percent currently. That change was Public Act 7 of 1996.

University presidents told Sen. John Schwarz, R-Battle Creek, they can't hold down tuitions when they're due for just a 3 percent state aid increase under a budget proposed by Gov. John Engler and passed by the House.

"We'll have to raise tuition 5.92 percent," Oakland University's interim president Gary Russel said Wednesday during budget hearings.

"We're looking at 4 to 6 percent," said James Renick, chancellor of the University of Michigan-Dearborn. "If we went with a 3 percent (tuition hike), it would not be enough to improve quality on our campus. I don't think it would be a deterrent (to enrollment)." "We asked a 5 percent state appropriation increase and a 4 percent tuition increase," answered Eastern Michigan University President William Shelton.

Asked by Schwarz how EMU would respond if it got a 6 percent state aid hike, Shelton said, "I'd try to meet the CPI (consumer price index) — the letter of the law."

"I can't balance the budget with a 5 percent tuition increase," said University of Michigan Provost Gilbert Whitaker. "I'd need 6 percent (more) from the state to stay (keep tuition) at the CPI for in-state tuition."

"A 6 percent increase in tuition," said Charlie Nelms, chancellor of the UM-Flint Campus, where Schwarz conducted a hearing of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Higher Education.

And so it went. All day, Schwarz gathered ammunition for his attack on the Engler-House budget. Schwarz wants a 6 percent general increase in state support for universities — a boost he said will cost $20 million to $25 million.

'We're looking at 4 to 6 percent. If we went with a 3-percent (tuition hike), it would not be enough to improve quality on our campus. I don't think it would be a deterrent (to enrollment).'

Schwarz, a 57-year-old physician with gubernatorial ambitions of his own, gave strong hints where he would find most of the money: the $10.4 million bonus called "special funds" that Engler wants to give Michigan State University, the $4.2 million extra for Western Michigan and $1 million for Grand Valley State.

Schwarz repeatedly referred to that plan as "three winners and 12 losers" among the 15 public university campuses.

Wednesday's hearing was the first of four his three-member panel will conduct on the $1.3 billion budget bill. The next in southeastern Michigan will be April 28 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the University of Detroit-Mercy.

Among the nearby regional universities, UM-Dearborn charges $3,685 in tuition and fees a year; Oakland, $3,206; and Eastern, $3,180. Their charts showed a pattern: State support was 70 percent of their budgets until the 1980s; today it's 50-50 between state aid and tuitions.

Sen. Jon Cisky, R-Saginaw, gave them an argument. He said state appropriations had increased faster than the consumer price index and faster than HEPI, the higher education price index.

Meanwhile, tuitions had outstripped the CPI and HEPI.

"What'dja do with all the money?" Cisky asked repeatedly. In 10 years, he said, HEPI has risen 58 percent. He cited:

■ UM-Flint — a 74 percent state aid increase, but a 98.1 percent hike in tuition and fees. Replied chancellor Helms: "We're in a developing stage."

■ Oakland University — a 62.8 percent state aid increase but an 82.7 percent rise in tuition.

■ UM-Dearborn — a 74.4 percent state aid increase, a 93.5 percent tuition increase. Chancellor Renick: UM-D had high capital outlays and debt service costs; 26 percent of the students are in engineering, a high-cost program.

■ Eastern Michigan — a 66.4 percent state aid increase, an 82 percent tuition increase. President Shelton: EMU shifted a specific fee to a general fee, exaggerating the appearance of the general fee increase. The current board also decided, as a matter of policy, that EMU would no longer try to be at the bottom of the tuition ladder.

University of Michigan-Ann Arbor Campus — state appropriations hikes exceeded the consumer price index by 24 percent, but UM-AA tuition rose 120 percent more than the CPI. "My district people ask me, 'When's it gonna end? We can't afford to send our children to school,'" Cisky said.

UM President James Duderstadt, last on the program, had a detailed answer ready:

■ "Since the turn of the century, higher education costs have risen 2 percent a year faster than the consumer price index. Higher education is not indexed to an urban dweller's living costs; it's the knowledge industry. The rate of increase is not at all out of line with the way it has been for decades."

■ To understand the rising costs of college, "Think of a surgeon teaching micro-surgery, not a doddering old professor teaching Shakespeare."

Refer to House Bill 4425, higher education appropriations, when writing to your state senator, State Capitol, Lansing 48909.

Beardmore bucks Engler over higher ed compact

BY TIM RICHARD
STAFF WRITER

Dorothy Beardmore, a state Board of Education member, is fighting Gov. John Engler's effort to pull Michigan out of the Midwestern Higher Education Compact.

Beardmore, R-Rochester, told a Senate Appropriations panel the eight-state group has saved higher education far more than the $58,000 annual dues it has cost.

"A telecommunications network was created. Institutions of higher education saved $3.5 million on purchases of $16 million for interactive video equipment and room design," she told senators in a hearing in Flint.

Lawmakers like interactive video, in which a teacher on one campus addresses students in another location — even an industrial plant — by two-way video. It is seen as making good use of valuable resources and a cost savings.

"Property insurance costs have been reduced by group purchases," Beardmore said. "There have been enhanced loss-control efforts."

Development of minority faculty, leadership programs for women in higher education, and computer software packages for class scheduling are among other accomplishments of the compact, Beardmore said.

She was the only person to speak for or against the compact in the four-hour hearing April 12. The rest of the session was devoted to budget presentations from university presidents and chancellors.

"I've supported that in the past," said Sen. John Schwarz, R-Battle Creek, chair of the Senate subcommittee on higher education appropriations. "You have my commitment to look at it."

Beardmore, a former Rochester and Oakland Intermediate school board member, is in her second term on the state board. A moderate, she sometimes finds herself at odds with Engler and his conservative ally, Clark Durant, president of the state board.

Engler proposes to zero out the $58,000 dues figure, though his budget message doesn't give a reason. Michigan joined in 1990. Currently the compact has eight members: Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio and Wisconsin. Still out are Indiana and Iowa.

The House went along with Engler, dropping the item from this year's higher education budget. The $1.3 billion bill is now in the Senate.

"This will be the most hotly contested of the 18 or 19 budget bills," Schwarz said as the hearing opened. "I have some disagreements with the bill as it came over from the House."

"Ours was the last region in the U.S. to form a compact," Beardmore told Schwarz's panel. The compact's goals are administrative cost savings, regional academic cooperation, and encouragement of student access and affordability.

Slow or inaccurate readers can be helped with Special program

LIVONIA-Try reading the following sentence: (Hint: the b's, d's, p's, and q's are interchanged and the spaces between the words are altered.) oh y ou hav etroup here ading these esimid lew orbs?

Was it hard for you to read the previous sentence (do you have trouble reading these simple words)? Unfortunately, many children find it just as hard reading normal text.

Children with learning problems struggle with everyday tasks such as reading, concentrating, and remembering because their basic learning skills are not automatic.

We all learn to read on a conscious level. We start by having to think about the sound a letter makes. Next we learn to blend sounds to form words. And then we learn the meaning of these words. Each skill requires a conscious effort, and reading cannot become automatic (subconscious) until these skills are established. And if reading is not automatic, children have to work especially hard to get information in, so their comprehension and understanding suffer.

According to Dr. John Jacobi, a locally known expert on vision and learning, having 20/20 eyesight means that a child can see clearly, but does not mean that the child can process or use what he or she sees. There could be a visual processing problem that affect the child's ability to learn.

Symptoms of a visual processing problem include:

- letter reversals
- avoidance of reading
- poor eye-hand coordination
- lack of concentration
- inability to sit still
- slow work
- careless errors
- troubles copying

Children who struggle with learning have even more at stake than just slow and choppy reading. Also at risk may be their self-esteem behavior, success in school, and even future employment options.

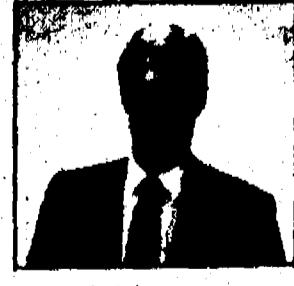

The Vision Improvement Program (VIP) can help the child place basic learning and visual processing skills into the subconscious level where they belong. Then the child will not put his or her energy into processing the material, but into understanding it.

VIP was developed by a team of visual, psychological, and educational professionals. The program attacks the causes of learning problems.

The 10-week program produces dramatic results, with an average improvement of 3.1 years in the child's ability to comprehend, stay on task, work faster, and handle more complex tasks. Outstanding results are the norm because it is an intense, one-on-one program with a highly trained therapist who specializes the program to meet each child's specific learning needs.

To identify a child who could benefit from this program, a comprehensive screening consisting of 18 different tests is provided without charge to children ages 6 to 15. If the results reveal a problem processing visual information, the program can begin immediately to help head toward a more successful future and a better self-esteem.

To help a child who has a problem learning, call Suburban Optometric at 525-8170 to schedule his or her free screening.

TASTE BUDS

CHEF LARRY JANES

There are no small potatoes at our house

I'm a meat and potatoes kind of guy. I know I have to eat vegetables, and bread is more like a dessert than anything else. But whether it be a simple broiled steak, baked chicken or pot roast, the only thing in my mind that could make it better would be a great potato.

The Janes Gang doesn't consider it a meal without some kind of potato or starch. We've been eating more rice and trendy starches like couscous, barley, bulgur and quinoa, but nothing beats a great potato.

Momma was, and is still, known for her exemplary mashed potatoes. Whenever the grandkids visit they ask - "Mimmi, make any mashed potatoes?"

What makes them special is momma's secret addition of a pared parsnip. She tosses it into the ruggedly simmering pot of "all purpose" potatoes. Please don't tell any of the grandkids that they've been secretly eating a vegetable without knowing it.

My favorites

Personal favorites include potatoes baked in rock salt. I'll never forget the delectable taste of my first potato baked in rock salt. I never knew potatoes could be so fluffy. "What's the secret?" you ask? Scrub and pat dry some good bakerefs. Place them in a deep casserole dish and cover with rock salt. Bake at 350 degrees until an inserted fork easily slides out. That's it. Nothing special, no secret. Potatoes and rock salt, period.

Want to make them even better? Try this method with a Yukon Gold potato. Look for Yukon Gold potatoes at upscale markets including Vic's Quality Fruit Market in Novi and Beverly Hills, Pappa Joe's in Rochester, Joe's Produce in Livonia, Strawberry Hills in Farmington Hills, and the Roadside Market in Plymouth.

You can get a bag of rock salt at your local hardware store and start cooking. You can reuse the rock salt over and over. Try baking a pear, especially a Bosc, or an apple in rock salt. You'll think you've died and gone to heaven.

Equally demanded on the potato front are my ever popular no-fat fries. Again, using a good Idaho baker or a Yukon Gold, I scrub the potato, pat dry and cut into wedges. The wedges go skin side down on a baking sheet and the potatoes are sprayed with non-stick coating like Pam or even better, the all new "I Can't Believe It's Not Butter" fat-free spray. Then I give the potatoes a healthy shake of Mrs. Dash table blend seasoning and pop them under a broiler until golden brown. The entire process takes less than 15 minutes, and if your kids like fries, this is the healthy alternative.

Fellow workout buddy George of Garden City passed along an equally good potato recipe at last week's 6:15 a.m. aerobic class. George suggests that you wedge up a bunch of potatoes, sprinkle them with cayenne pepper, paprika or chili powder and one beaten egg white (beat until stiff). The beaten egg white gives these potatoes a real crispy coating and the spices make them tasty. Place the coated potatoes on a baking sheet sprayed with non-stick cooking spray and then bake them at 400 degrees for about 40 minutes. Making no fat fries these ways will save more than 12 grams of fat from each serving.

Hash browns

Hash browns have always been a personal favorite and whenever I bake up a batch of potatoes I always make a few extra for a batch of hash browns. I find the biggest non-stick pan I can get my hands on and fry up a chopped onion in a little butter or margarine until it just begins to turn golden.

Then I grate an old baked potato that has been in the refrigerator for a few days (skin and all). Cover the pan with a lid, reduce the heat to medium low and let it simmer for about 15 minutes. The trick is "flipping" the batch so nothing falls onto the stove burners.

I would be remiss not to mention scalloped potatoes. Once in a while, a batch of homemade scalloped potatoes, the way momma used to make them with shredded cheddar and a roux of browned butter and flour, is just what this old homeboy needs.

The Dr. Moms we talked to serve their children nutritious foods that are low in fat. They agree the best thing to do with children is to offer them a variety of good foods, and let them choose what they want.

BY SANDRA DALEA-PRYSEY
SPECIAL WRITER

Have you wondered what doctors feed their children?

The answer isn't a medical secret. The "Dr. Moms" we talked to serve their children nutritious food.

Dr. Susan Bellefleur, a pediatrician who lives in Beverly Hills, was already aware of the importance of making good food choices before the birth of her son, Matthew, four years ago.

"A number of things helped me evolve toward a healthy life-style," said Bellefleur.

"My father had a massive heart attack when I was 11 years old, and this served as a wake-up call for the whole family," she said. "My mother started cooking healthier meals and she eliminated such things as fried and fatty foods, and smoked meats from our diet."

"Our whole way of eating changed. For instance, our tradition of having bacon and eggs for breakfast was replaced by nutritious foods, like whole grain cereals."

With this foundation, and with the knowledge she gained in medical school about good nutrition, Bellefleur, and her husband Jeffrey, a pediatric anesthesiologist, normally eat only good foods and participate in a regular exercise program.

"We have given Matthew healthy foods from the very beginning and he likes them. When he goes to birthday parties, he takes the frosting off his piece of cake, because, he says, it's too sweet."

She added that her son considers "treats" to be such things as applesauce and yogurt. "For Matthew, a really special treat would be a Fudgesicle, or homemade lower-fat chocolate chip cookies."

According to Bellefleur, she sees too much childhood obesity in her practice. "Children not only eat the wrong things, they are too sedentary. I urge parents to feed their children healthy foods and to encourage them to do regular exercise."

A big part of her advice to parents is to watch the fat in their children's diet. "Children over the age of two can drink low fat or skim milk. Whole milk is a must for babies under two years of age, and greasy and fat foods, such as grilled cheese sandwiches and deep fried chicken pieces, should be limited."

She also advises that salt shouldn't be added to the food their children eat. "If children don't acquire a taste for "unhealthy" types of food, they won't Kenwood Vineyards, in Sonoma Valley, a Sonoma County California appellation, has been making premium wine since 1970. At the time of Kenwood's founding, there were only 30 wineries in all of Sonoma County.

Martin Lee Sr., his sons, Marty and Michael, and their brother-in-law, John Sheela, acquired the historic Pagan Brothers Winery (founded in 1906) and renamed it Kenwood Vineyards. The best part of the Kenwood story is that the same people are still there, 25 years later, making consistently great wines. Americans are attracted to the new kid on the block when buying American wine, but prefer experienced European producers. It is time to give kudos for experience and consistency in the good ole USA.

"We were organic winegrowers back in the early 1970s," recalled winemaker Michael Lee. "In the early 1980s, with a host of new agricultural chemicals available, farmers began to use every new pesticide and herbicide they could get their hands on. If there was a disease, there was a chemical to get rid of it."

KENWOOD WINERY

Winery founders: Kenwood Winery's founders and owners John Sheela, (left to right), Marty Lee, and winemaker Michael Lee, are still together and enthusiastic about their partnership after 25 years. They produce consistently good wines.

Kenwood has come full circle in the 1990s. They are now getting away from chemicals, and are becoming organically certified viticulturists. Without the use of chemicals, grape vines are trained and pruned to open the leaf canopy so the fruit is in view. This way, the sun and wind help keep the grapes warm, dry and healthy.

"Family ownership is very special in the wine business," Lee said. "When we purchased Kenwood, the three boys (Michael, Marty and John) divided our roles into departments. I'm in charge of winemaking, Marty handles sales and John is president. We have each become experts in our area of specialty while supporting each other. With equal power, salary and responsibility, there is no need to compete. We make decisions independently, but with constant communication and discussion."

However, everyone watches sales at Kenwood and chardonnay continues to lead the pack. Even though it is written that consumers are looking for an alternative white

C. J. RISAK

Her obsession with perfection was near-fatal

She's thin still. But she's no longer frail. That was the immediate impression in speaking with her last week, and when talking about anorexia nervosa, the difference is essential.

Her thinness is a physical trait; her past frailty made it a dangerous, potentially fatal one. When emotional frailty focuses on weight control, the results can be devastating.

The young woman in question — she requested anonymity — is a rather recent Plymouth Canton graduate. She ran cross country and track, and was extremely good at both.

Until the disease overwhelmed her.

She had a good year athletically as a sophomore at Canton. But as she slipped further and further into anorexia, her progress stopped. She began the cross country season her junior year as one of the top runners on the team.

By the time the season ended, she was barely in the top seven.

She managed to regain enough form — and weight — to compete in track that spring, but when her junior year came to a close so did her athletic career. She had slipped too far.

She was admitted into a hospital for treatment of her anorexia that summer. She stayed there for a month.

"It was an ongoing thing I was battling throughout high school," she said.

Here was a classic case of anorexia: The emotional strain of adolescence combining with a lack of self-esteem; it creates a strong need to be successful and perfect at everything, to be accepted by all and to be all things to all people. But most important, you must be in control.

"The summer before ninth grade," she recalled. "That was the beginning of it."

She weighed nearly 105 pounds. In a matter of three months, she lost more than 20 pounds — 20 percent of her total weight. She regained some of it, but she never weighed more than 95 pounds in high school.

From what she learned, she could say that while most males greet adolescence with optimism, females go in the opposite direction. With physical beauty at such a premium, high-profile models are imitated. Which leads to a "thinner is better" attitude, she said.

Her athleticism contributed to it, too. Distance runners don't need weight, or so it was thought. "The thinner you are, the less you have to carry around," was her logic.

She wasn't alone. Two of her better friends on Canton's team were borderline anorexics. "Talking about food was such a common thing," she said. "You had to have the lowest body fat to be the fittest."

And to be the best is an obsession for anorexic athletes. Having a low percentage of body fat wasn't good enough; hers had to be the lowest.

She would often train by running six miles a day — while consuming less than 600 calories. "Some days I'd only have 100-300 calories," she estimated.

But why? Eating is a normal function; once the problem is identified, can't it be easily reversed?

"It's really complicated," she explained. "It becomes very much a control issue. (Anorexics) feel like they're losing control in some areas, but they can control their weight. It gets to the point where you say, 'I have ultimate power and control, and I don't need to eat. I'm the best at that.'"

After a period of time, the physical strain of starvation turns a psychological problem into a medical one. "You deny your appetite, and you get a high off the hunger pains," she said. "You get used to feeling that way, you get addicted to it. When you eat and feel full, it's a nightmare."

The effect alters mental perceptions as well. If an anorexic gains a single pound, her self-esteem plunges. When she looks in the mirror, she sees beauty — not bones protruding through tightly stretched skin.

Her cure came through addressing her need for perfection. After months of therapy, instead of seeking approval from others, she became more assertive and dominant. As her self-confidence grew, her desire to be the thinnest diminished. Her demons were defeated.

Others aren't so fortunate. Estimates are that six percent of those afflicted by anorexia die from it.

She considers herself lucky because she was diagnosed when she was a freshman. "I really think we need to focus on prevention," she said, noting massive weight loss and an obsession with food and calorie counting as primary warning signals. "Early intervention is crucial."

In her case, it may have been life-saving.

■ Young and athletic, strongly motivated both in school and in her sport, she seems a model of perfection. But it's a lie. When weight control becomes obsessive, she begins a journey that could prove fatal.

It is devious. That is the first lesson to learn. It all too often is disregarded; treatment is ignored, the disease shrugged off as "just another passing phase" in the life of a modern-day teen-ager.

What happens next could be tragic. The disease: anorexia nervosa. In everyday terminology, it's self-starvation.

To someone who's never been exposed to it, that sounds ridiculous. After all, no one starves themselves purposely.

Which is what makes it so devious in nature. It is not a physical affliction, at least not at first. And it does not prey upon the weak or sick, or those of lesser intelligence.

No. Anorexia attacks those who could be among the elite: According to statistics, those most vulnerable to the disease are young females, from pre-adolescence to mid-20s in age, usually from middle- to upper-class families, highly intelligent and usually driven to perfection — both in the classroom and athletically.

George Przygodski, Plymouth Canton's girls track and cross country coach for the past 15 years, is well-acquainted with anorexia. He's seen it; he knows what to look for. He talks to his runners about it often.

How many cases has he seen? "Life-threatening? Maybe three or four," Przygodski estimated. "Potential anorexics — maybe 100. And that's probably a conservative guess."

Dr. Marie Beye, a clinical psychologist from Ann Arbor who has made a study of eating disorders, described anorexia as having "both strong mental and physical components."

But rather than refer to it as a mental problem, she called it an "identity disorder."

The reason: Those with low self-esteem are particularly prone to it. And teen-age girls, just beginning to mature physically with all the inherent emotional traumas, are most often in danger.

Coaches who don't recognize these dangers often contribute to them, according to Beye. A superb, promising 12-year-old gymnast begins to grow and mature; the result can be athletic retardation. The coach doesn't like that; lose weight, he tells his protegee.

"The push is to stay as thin as you were before," said Beye.

Thin is in. Young girls scan through glamor magazines, filled with too-thin models. That's what they want to be.

DYING TO WIN

A N O R E X I A

STORY BY C. J. RISAK • STAFF WRITER

The girls most susceptible are athletically inclined. The need to be perfect, to be the best, drives them. They excel academically; now they must do the same in sports.

"It's something in the makeup of distance runners — compulsiveness," said Livonia Stevenson girls cross country and track coach Paul Holmberg. "They know the harder they work, the better they will get. A little talent and a lot of hard work can make you an excellent runner."

Anorexic athletes are relentless trainers. But there, again, the deviousness of the disease creeps in.

Holmberg had an athlete who "associated progress with weight loss. She continued to lose weight even when she didn't need to."

As Przygodski explained it, "They think, 'If I'm better after losing five pounds, I'll be twice as good after losing 10.' These kids become obsessive about food. They cut out all fats, all meats."

Their athletic progress will begin to slide when the weight loss becomes dramatic. How dramatic? In clinical terms, a person becomes anorexic when they drop more than 20 percent below their normal body weight.

By that point, however, the disease is in control. It is an addiction to hunger pangs. Gaining a pound can be traumatic; if an anorexic believes she has eaten too much, she may induce vomiting.

That's when it becomes a physical affliction. Kidney failure, even heart attacks have resulted. According to studies, of those anorexics treated over a long period of time — and it can take years to cure — approximately 60 percent reach normal body weight, 20 percent improve but still are underweight, 20 percent remain anorexic, 5 percent become obese, and 6 percent die.

Alison Mann, whose sister Rachel ran at Canton several years ago before transferring to Ann Arbor Pioneer, was an outstanding runner. She became anorexic; last year, the disease killed her.

There is no specific cure. Therapy is often long-term. Holmberg used a widely accepted method when he faced a potential anorexic problem: "I told her, 'If you're losing weight to be a better runner, you won't run.'"

"It came to a point where I basically had to threaten her with not running."

Przygodski watches his athletes carefully. "When I hear girls who are obsessed with no-fat foods — who say, 'Let's go to the store and read fat contents on boxes' — there's an obsession there," he said.

He will sit in on meals with the team, watching what they eat. He will watch for excessive weight loss.

But in people who are often thin to start with, that is not always easy to spot. And the self-denial of an anorexic — they don't see themselves with a frame of skin and bones; their view of themselves is greatly distorted.

A N O R E X I A N E R V O S A

- What — Anorexia Nervosa is an eating disorder that evolves into a paralyzing fear of becoming fat. It begins as a psychological disorder that becomes a physiological one; induced vomiting to remove unwanted food can result in an electrolyte imbalance, which in turn leads to death.
- Those afflicted — The most common anorexic is a young white female, ranging in age from pre-adolescent to mid-20s. Their background is middle to upper class, and they have a tendency to be physically active. Studies indicate anorexia occurs in one-to-five percent of the group at highest risk.
- Symptoms — In anorexia, weight loss and behavioral changes are most common. A fanatical concern for weight loss is prevalent. In early stages, it ranges from 15 to 25 percent of normal body weight. A preoccupation with food is often evident. So, too, is sleep deprivation. Anorexics suffer from a lack of self-esteem, stemming from any number of sources, including family. Some psychologists believe the common anorexic's family is over-indulging, with parents extremely involved in the children's lives, making many decisions for them. In an effort to take control of their life, the anorexic will take control of what they can — their food intake. Anorexics are also perfectionist in nature, driven to succeed at everything, including sports. Weight is often viewed as fat and, therefore, an anathema to runners, gymnasts, swimmers, etc.
- Treatment — There is no specific treatment. Early diagnosis is of primary importance. The anorexic's intense fear of becoming fat coupled with an overestimation of body size results in a strong resistance to therapy. Goal-setting in the therapy often is useful. If a patient gains enough weight, she will be allowed so much exercise. In long-term treatment, half of the patients reach normal weight, 20 percent improve but remain underweight, 20 percent remain anorexic, five percent become obese and six percent die.
- Where to find help — Hawthorne Center in Northville, (313) 345-3000, ext. 207; William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, (313) 833-8000; Harper Hospital in Detroit, (313) 745-1007.

How interested are you in selling your home?

Interested enough to spend a few moments and discover the best place to advertise the fact that your home is for sale?

Good. We knew you were intelligent. In fact, more than 40% of our readers have college degrees or better.

And if knowledge is power, let's look at a few powerful facts: this newspaper, the one you're reading right now, reaches some of the most affluent households in Wayne and Oakland counties:

That's a median household income of more than $50,000—$10,000 more than the income of the people who don't read our newspapers. So when you advertise in your Observer & Eccentric newspapers, you not only reach thousands of smart people, you reach people with substantial incomes.

Now, that's something to smile about.

Our circulation area has 90% home ownership and look at the value of our reader's homes:

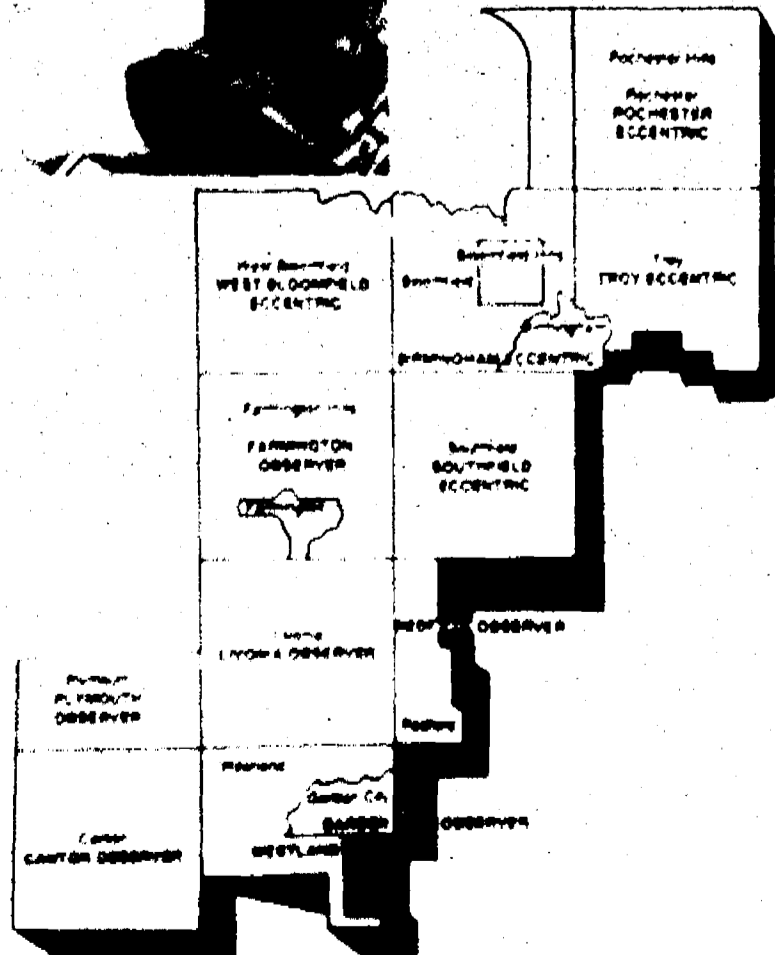

FACT: When you advertise with us you will reach 9 out of 10 adults in the Observer & Eccentric market area who have read weekly classified advertising.*

FACT: 91% of the adults in our market area who had read classified advertising in the past seven days had read it in the Observer & Eccentric*.

So, we can offer you one quarter of a million adult readers and a very rich market, what else do we have for you? How about an award-winning newspaper— a newspaper that people trust and look forward to reading? One that reaches 25 communities with important local news that's not available anywhere else.

That's us.

By the way, did you know that all those little ads in the back of this newspaper—the ones placed by people like you—are published in all 12 newspapers?

Therefore, when you advertise anything from a horn to a home, you will automatically reach this huge, interested reading audience.

What else can we say? We've had years of experience in publishing newspapers and are proud of our record for successfully putting home buyers in touch with home sellers.

In fact, we've just introduced HOMELINE,* a great new way to find out about open houses simply by using your touchtone telephone.

Be sure to mention it to your Realtor® so that when it comes time to show your home, it will be described on HOMELINE.
